Retire? Hah, not gonna happen.

In reality start saving every paycheck. See if your bank offers certificates with a decent interest rate.

apepi - January 9, 2018, 7:12 pm

A quick way to retire at 20 is armed robbery.

Start selling dope, preferably heroin or cocaine, and work your way up. Once you find out about someone transporting or holding a substantial load, you're GOING TO HAVE TO KILL THEM. As if they find out who you are the owner will surely want to retaliate. Take the goods, sell them discretely and quickly, and make sure not to raise suspicion. Don't act like a violent person, seem like the passive dealer so no one expects you.

Or you can win the lottery, but thats all RNG

It's not about the money. At least it shouldn't be. It's about accomplishing things in life, at the age of 20 you can't have done much.

Id be happy 15-20 years from my point in age now (35) to happily retire somewhere up in northern ontario, around a nice little lake, have a couple million for resource finances, but the reality is, it takes a hell of a lot of work to squirrel money away now a days. Everyone wants your money lol.

retirement is connected to your age.

Cyber - January 10, 2018, 6:17 am

Uh if he has the funds he can just not work what are people talking about. You "retire" when you have a 401k or a pension through your job and at a certain age you get the full benefit.

Doesn't matter any age if he has a ton of money he can do what he wants I don't understand lol

Scriph - January 10, 2018, 6:29 am

2,784,000 that's how much money your going to need to retire at 20 and never work a day in you life again.

Assuming there is no economic downfall, and inflation doesn't keep skyrocketing, you can live off 4000 a month as a middle class person.

Also it is wise to buy a house and car and pay them off before you retire.

Just become a hippy in the woods lmao.

Your ego is so bad rn.

Here's a funny thing: I'm 15, and I live below the poverty line by several thousand dollars a year.

I live with food insecurity, I eat chilli a lot because it's what I have.

I'm not jealous of your riches.

Also your missing the point here. Is your net worth over 2.5 million dollars? Nice. Now add a couple zeros to adjust for 50 years of inflatiion, and you can retire.

Biggy - January 10, 2018, 8:05 am

Ah, the new age. Where people invest into crypto, make a chump of change and then try to retire as a teenager. No work ethic.

Even if you have a million dollars, your money will deplete eventually then you'll be. 40 year old virgin that can't buy chocolate milk.

But have fun dude! Retire early.

Look into a roth IRA. You pay taxes to deposit money into an account. When you're ready to withdraw, any money you take out is tax free. You own all the money in the account. No taxes, debts, anything. It's 100% yours. Although you normally must hold the Roth account for at least five years and be at least 59½ before you can tap the earnings tax-free and penalty-free, there are exceptions, including death or disability of the account holder or to use up to $10,000 to purchase a first home for yourself or certain family members.

Look into it though because you can only contribute to one if you make under a certain income (and from what it looks like, you're outside of that income bracket).

cold truth: there is no possible formula for that.. you're either born lucky with rich mommy and daddy or you'll have to work so hard your entire life to "retire" at 32+ years old it was easy for cunterberg to retire early, snapchat, instagram creators etc because that was the time when those things didn't exist. now it's a lot harder to do something like that because the market is saturated if you're into those stuff. that was the only way to retire "quickly" but of course it required years of hard work.

unless you invent a time travel machine, you won't retire soon
