Let me ask is it work getting kicked out.. just so you know you get kicked out of one University your chances of getting into another one is next to nil. Is that worth it? If you fail you get academic probation, you can still finish your education. Now they won't just kick you out they will probably try to make an example out of you, so now you end up with legal problems, instead of signing up for next semester you sign a plea agreement.

Let's say you do not get caught, great not a single instructor will notice that the grades they gave you have changed?! Come on continue on with your life and just study, if you put the amount of learning you would do to hack a grades panel into studying you would end up passing the rest of the year.

Yeah I highly doubt that. Don't do anything stupid OP, and don't trust those who claim such things, you're putting your school and working experience at risk for nothing. Study and work hard to earn your grades, professors aren't stupid and will notice if a grade magically raises, and once you're caught you'll have to pay a big amount of money in damages and maybe even go to jail for some years, which will mark your criminal records. Does it sound worth it? Spoiler art, it's not.

Yeah the amount of hours of research needed to do this would easily get you good grades. And the guys pming you are scammers 99,99%, there is no way to trust those ys. You can study penetration and security in your free time If you dig it but this is definitely not worth it

Not worth the risk of getting kicked out of college. Study and actually earn good grades, it will make you feel good knowing you did the work and it will help you in the long run.

OP I know it sounds crazy that we are saying that it's not worth it right? You maybe thinking that we are some limp dick hackers, but truth is there are some good people here not just hacking wise but also morally. I think everyone here likes to see members not get in trouble or mess up their lives, instead we would rather see good thing happen to good people.
