Thread: Thank you inspect element

Motley - February 1, 2018, 4:44 am

So Im doing online school finishing up my senior year of high school. Almost 90% off the work I have to do is this bullshit, read an article, take a quick quiz. Was playing around with it and Im able to get all correct answer by using inspect element and changing choice.correct === false to true and boom, question answered correctly.

Pasific - February 1, 2018, 8:07 am

Well I think you should actually make it the normal. When you'll get a test about it you'll pretty much be fucked probably Dont get tests on it, overall the whole system is fucked and very very easy.

VirtualFrost - February 1, 2018, 12:35 pm

Did this actually submit as correct? I'd say report it as it's a big issue but then they'd ask how you knew pmxd - February 1, 2018, 3:31 pm

I would sell this to other students lol

I remember having to show my grades back in middle school and shit and id just inspect element them all to A's and hope my parents wouldnt refresh the page lmao

Lmao I used to do that too, a life saver tbh.

Gliese - February 1, 2018, 8:19 pm

That doesn't sound really sound legit. One would expect the code that checks whether or not the answer is correct to be server-sided rather than client-sided...

oRequiem - February 1, 2018, 8:27 pm

I feel like it wouldn't actually send as "correct."
Inspect Element is client sided.

College will be the exact same way.
Cheat until you're out and you'll do just fine.

Yes, it submitted at the end showing a test score with which questions I got correct and they all were correct and worked.

I don't think they answer was A for every question.

That only changes the setting in your local browser

Elitas - February 2, 2018, 1:53 am

I mean, you could maybe see which answer is correct by looking at associating code, but I find it hard to believe that this would work. They need to store your results server-side, correct? So, what you're saying is that it corrects your answers with Javascript and then submits the true/false to the database? Hmm, if you're doing an IT course, the person who made that has to be really fucking dumb, who would make it in Javascript and not foresee this happening...

Inspect Element is client sided.

Inspect Element is client sided but you'd be able to change the values that it forwards

MyzoArt - February 2, 2018, 3:30 pm

Robinshiva - February 3, 2018, 11:24 am

Biggy - February 4, 2018, 4:45 am

Yeah, of course. But it's usually the server that checks whether or not the value is actually correct.

Chief Turbo - February 5, 2018, 8:45 am inspect element is cool af u can use it on people that have no clue about tech

Sadly whoever coded that platform listed the correct answers so it'll always pass the correct value if you switch it up.

Lol, I love finding cool ways like that to get the answers to tests. A lot of the answers are usually posted online somewhere too.

nicksaban1 - February 5, 2018, 9:59 am

Lol. I thought I was the only one who used that method.

SkullTraill - February 5, 2018, 9:59 am

Fuck man, where do you live that the education is so poor? :/

FeelsBadMan.

Toph - February 5, 2018, 10:17 am

I've never used a method such as this before. I prefer Google.

Woes - February 5, 2018, 7:41 pm

Bro whaaaat.

I do online school and searched through all the source of my quizzes and tests and couldn't find any leaks.

Help me.

Bluffer - February 5, 2018, 7:42 pm

Sounds pretty dumb that the site was coded like that. I did online school for a short while and we had tests still. I dont know if I believe this.

Confound - February 5, 2018, 8:01 pm

Be careful doing this. If you get caught somehow (not saying you will), you're fucked.

Prophett - February 5, 2018, 8:05 pm

THC - February 5, 2018, 8:09 pm

Some exams we do in class have the code in the url. You can just change false to true and you can start the exam before the teacher starts it.
