From what I have seen, Maxim has been a huge part of the community. Even before my original ban on HackForums, he was doing a significant amount of work, posting informational threads, etc. I've looked over his contributions, and compared to many others, he himself has created a significant amount of threads mainly specified in graphic design, but not limited to.

The rules are stated in the OP.

Also just because someone has a title or special rank don't make them Notable.

Our selection process has nothing to do with users rank and or users title.

It doesn't make the user notable but the point of the wiki is to document the forum, he is undoubtedly something to be documented because he is a leader of a group. You can't nitpick information.

I don't see what point you're arguing at this time. Lrrr has been around this forum for some time. It's just a matter of moments until someone suggests him as a notable member to have an article written about. Also, someone doesn't have to be publicly voted on to receive a page, either. If notable work has been provided by them throughout the years, they will more than likely receive a page in their honor.
