Thread: [Where would you prefer to live for the rest of your life \[Cold/Warm\] country](#)

Theocritus - February 21, 2018, 10:14 am so personally i am from Norway, a fairly cold country in the world. In the last year though i have lived mainly in the Philippines, a very warm country. Now personally i have always hated the cold, and if i had to choose, i would choose a warm country to live in rather than a cold one.

what would you prefer? which country do you think would suit yourself best? (Temperature based only).

SysAdmin - February 21, 2018, 10:15 am

I'm more of a "Mild" Temperature guy, I like around 20-25°C weather because It's not too cold but not too hot either. Although if I had to pick Cold/Warm, I would definitely pick Cold, since you can always put on more clothes, but you can't take your clothes off when you're naked.

i am the same, that temperature between 20-25 is heaven for me

I would love to live in a warm country, I cannot stand the cold, it is terrible. As a guy who normally never wear jackets, I literally freeze

Canadian - February 21, 2018, 10:36 am

I used to hate the cold and missed Florida for a while, but now I'm used to it. A place where it's 20 celcius all the time would be heaven though.

Lmfaoo always fear the unknown.. It can happen to all of us :o

However I do not like it too hot or too cold just in the middle, with some breeze

hahoa1 - February 21, 2018, 10:47 am

I would say I prefer a warm country to live in,,,, no need of heating for rooms :D

On cold countries if it is a humid country aswell the humidity enters your bones xD and I really hate that ,,,, Because even If i'm dressed for the cold the humidity will find its way in xD

Not to hot but definitely no Cold

I like the weather in Scotland, it's my ideal. I've worked and lived in extreme heat climates (45-50c), and i hated it, I liked Germany, its climate was decent, apart from the car denting hail stones the size of golf balls.

Hails size of gold balls :O? I don't imagine ever living their at all without a garage, probably one of the first things I would invest in.

Is there any insurance for that? Car insurance must be expensive over there. Is there a lot of fatalities and injuries too?

i mean as it should count as weather conditions a normal insurance would cover it. in most countries anyways. depends if the company considers it like extreme weather which is not covered.

Idk i never had to deal with it, it was rental the army sort out for you, they weren't shocked when they got the car back. I was leaving for Afghan 2 days later, i really didn't give it a second thought, my pay admin officer never chinned me for it in theater or after i got back.

I only experienced that a couple times when stationed there.

i get a 20-25c summer with plenty wind and rain. I'm okay with that :D

The people are really friendly if you make an effort to communicate with them in their native tongue. It's a clean country from what i seen, it has a nice diversity of peoples living in it, roads seemed good, public transport good, to name a few. The hail storms were not a frequent problem.

I would rather be in warm weather, the cold weather sucks and is extremely boring.

JoshAllen - February 21, 2018, 12:36 pm

Warm over cold easily. I would prefer wearing shorts and drinking lots of fluids instead of wearing thick jackets and drinking coffee.

Omniscient - February 21, 2018, 12:47 pm

I'm retiring in Costa Rica as an expat.

I'll be happy somewhere I can play golf year round every morning, sit at the beach in the afternoon, smoke a Cuban cigar in the evening with a Scotch. I won't even own a computer.

I'd prefer warm days, beach, and sandals over a parka, snow boots, and freezing my ass off while I shovel snow from my driveway. No thanks on the cold.

Renovatum - February 21, 2018, 12:49 pm

I prefer being cold more than being warm. Scotland is the perfect temperature, but it rains too much. If there's a place that's cold with no rain or wind, I would happily stay there-- so long as living costs aren't too high whilst going to university someday, though you said that this choice is based on temperature only.
