Thread: DarkTrack slaves without spreading RAT?!

Lmfao, what the fuck is going on. I just downloaded DarkTrack, and after setting it up, I got around 5-7 connections... All BS account names on fresh installed VM's. They were also for some reason ALL editing registry's from CMD.... Which seems kinda random and inefficient imo.... No Wireshark nothing, just fresh installed VM's which for some reason connected to my client. Anyone know why this might've happened? I use a password....

Honeypots you fool.... These guys are the AV's security researchers analysing your malware... I hope you didn't use home connection.

Did you upload your stub somewhere? If so, where did you upload it?

LMFAO. I'M SUCH A CUNT.

I was REFUD'ing a shitty crypter I had made myself, and uploaded the stub to virustotal, just to check it out xD

How did I not realize my mistake ? ?

I shouldn't be allowed on the internet when high

Yup researchers .. I would say kill it some researchers go above board and will hack your VPS just so you are aware. The if you get a real crazy one they will infect you and proceed to hack back. Also where did you upload this? Twitter/FB/YT/insta I am guessing you had a link to DL there are scrapers that automatically just DL it all and run it .. betting it was FB..

I haven't uploaded it anywhere except for VirusTotal. I'm not spreading malware. I was resuming a project, which I had given up on a long time ago.

All I wanted to see was how it was performing at scantime, I knew it was still long from FUD (12 detections), but I figured it didn't matter since I'm long from done anyway.

The fact that they analyze infected files didn't even cross my mind ?

Ha that is interesting well either way be happy most of those guys aren't the crazy people I talked about. Also thank you for not spreading malware God knows we don't need no more.

Crypting12 - February 24, 2018, 11:40 am

If so, where did you upload it?
