Does windows 10 really have spyware? if it does then should I downgrade to windows 7? I use linux to do fishy things most of the time, but I also use windows 10 alot, and I really really dont want to send any "statistics", even if it is anonymous.

PerfectStorm - March 10, 2018, 2:17 am

Will Microsoft unlawfully use basic statistical information about your PC against you, or share it to other resources without lawful reason? no. Its not really personal. Would you care?

Are they interested in your Porn activities? no.

Is it possible you are caught breaking into banking accounts and somehow Microsoft has legal grounds to disclose "information" to support that? Sure. If you gave it to them. Goodluck with the War you're fighting.

Indeed, I dont think downgrading to Windows 7 is remotely a solution ?

Eh, that's true. I'd use Mint but I need it for "muh gaymes" lol

FYI Windows 7 now has nearly identical telemetry software to Windows 10, so you are sharing equally as much information regardless of which OS you are using unless you have specifically blocked and disabled such features.

Nah only joking I would probably be lost without windows

Ok, I saw many "tools" that stop Microsoft from spying on you, all of them on another very reputed forum and by reputed people on the forum

I guess I know what they are now

What do you think about that iNaruto - March 13, 2018, 3:03 pm

Yes they are, you should disable telemetry.
