Thread: How do I get my first viewers on twitch?

SIM-3446573 - March 26, 2018, 2:50 pm

I sometimes stream for hours at a time without anyone checking out my stream. Its not that my stream is that bad (I think) But when I have 1 viewers noone even finds it at the bottom of the list. Any tips for getting people to checking it out?

You could get a strong social media following by getting gamers to shout you out on twitter with a link to your stream, if they like you they will follow you.

Note you probably have to pay for these shoutouts but you could get hundreds of viewers possibly.

You can easily get some cheap viewers by addings randoms on steam addmegroups and inviting them to a group where you giveaway humble bundle codes daily.

Just post a status when you start streaming and you will easily get some viewers that might hang around if your entertaining.

There are also good steam invite bots out there

Social media presence is crucial. Also setup content times to get recurring viewers and be active n funny!

I would say social media, and to keep that audience, have a schedule that people can follow, and lastly make sure that your viewers are entertained.

When i stream, i play with professional gamers so i get some viewers, never less than 50 but just know who to game with. They will definitely help you, heres the thing about playing video games, you cant drop everything and play video games, its suppose to be as a side. Thats the reality, if you arent making money autopilot then i dont recommend you to play video games full time

It's all about social media and etc try to reach out to the people who shoutout on twitter and etc. Shout out gamers and shoutoutretweets can be helpful with this

Make sure that wherever you shoutout to actually have something to offer. Most people don't want to be bombarded with a link unless they get something in return.

Increase the quality of your stream. This includes things like graphics and an overlay. Add alerts for followers, donations, subs etc. People love being noticed. Considering looking into viewbots and chatbots to get you higher on the list. Stream with other streamers and share growth.
