So i was on the weight loss subreddit, and i was just discussing cheat meals, and all of a sudden i was barraged with comments like 'downvoting this, the lack of punctuation makes it harder for the viewer to read it' and shit like that, and the worst part was that people were agreeing with him?! it's the fucking internet, and the fact people are actually like that makes me hate earth 'No capital letters after fullstops' and shit like that, i honestly thought they were trolling at first

Reddit is full of man-children, at least 4chan isn't so self righteous.

Weight loss sub-Reddit.

Sounds like a place for bunch of egotistical meatheads. Anyways, don't sweat it.

It is not completely fine, it just admits to being a cesspool, which is better than people on reddit with their head up their ass.

If you want to see the cancer of Reddit just visit

reddit.com/r/pcmasterrace

But Reddit isn't that bad, at least not 4chan level.

I mean if you actually read the other comments you would know what I'm on about.

Reddit is actually pretty chill; I've never had an experience like yours on Reddit.

However, some subreddits might be more "aggressive" with their stances, and they might bash you if you don't follow their rules and/or hidden rules.

Is this your first ever argument over the internet?

If you have difficulty with Reddit, I DARE you to go onto StackOverflow and ask some programming questions.

Is this your first time not reading the previous comments to see that your first comment didn't need to be here?

They're both pretty bad. Reddit is probably better for more 'serious' discussion whereas 4chan is 99% shitposting.

This. Although I use both for the same purpose.
