Thread: Trust Scan Username Special Characters

Omniscient - March 28, 2018, 4:12 pm

You'll notice that on Trust Scan I added a "Special Characters in Username" row. If it's YES then it's yellow (caution) and if it's NO then it's green.

Could potentially help with finding imposters.

Enjoy. Thanks.

Small feature but a huge impact. Good work Omni. :)

Biggy - March 28, 2018, 4:15 pm

Nice little update to make the feature better.

Thanks.

Now people will look down upon me for not having a cool original username.

Great now I look like an imposter. :(

Will be helpful though, thanks Omni.

Saltpeter - March 28, 2018, 5:23 pm

Great little addition to the feature, thank you Omni.

Oh cool, Trust Scan is back. Apparently Russian is considered 'special characters' though it makes sense considering they aren't part of the standard character set used in English.

Because russian contains "special characters" as in, non latin alpha numeric characters.

95 characters; the 52 alphabet characters belong to the Latin script, anything else would be considered special. I believe russian characters are the Cyrillic character set.

An interesting feature update! Is it possible for you to check how many username changes there have been since making this announcement? ;)

btw this made me giggle ?

Not good in English but I think it should be "Your Admin", right?
