

Forum: Hack Forums

Thread: My 8 Years journey on HackForums.

Deal - April 12, 2018, 5:47 am

I joined Hackforums back in 2010, at the age of 14.

I've always been seeking wisdom, wanting to learn things. I "suffer" from ADHD, which means that I'm hyperactive, and my mind has no chill.

I've always had lots of friends, and been really good socially, but sometimes things just went out of hands with my temper.

Because of the disorder, I'm eager to try new things, I can't ever settle. As of now I train muay thai, does strenght training, draws, makes music, and is taking a solid education.

I need to constantly challenge myself and do something in order to function.

This is especially where Hackforums has helped me, I love being social in real life but sometimes it's nice for me to be able to sit down and be myself.

I've met a lot of great people at this forum through the past years.

I've seen a lot of people evolve, as well as the forum who Omniscient does a great job keeping up to date.

I have really gained a lot of valuable information through the boards.

I started out by learning about RAT's, and quickly got a hold of it.

The first tutorial I wrote was my RAT tutorial, featuring 4 kinds of RAT's. This came handy for lots of people and I started making new acquaintances.

I found great ways to monetize, and had at the age of 16 made thousands of dollars with the help of the knowledge I acquired on the boards.

I therefore wrote a few e-Books, that was meant to help the users on the forums gaining the same knowledge, and with great success.

I proceeded to look into SQL injections, and wrote a tutorial on MyBB hacking.

As of now, I'm still doing a little bit of business on the forums, I'm looking into general pentesting, and website hacking.

And then I'm hanging out in the lounge, and chilling in the gambling section.

I'm planning on making more tutorials, and soon start conducting business again.

Hackforums has been a huge impact on my life, the boards gave me a chance to evolve quicker than other 14 year olds, as well as help me with my disorder.

A lot of the things I know today, I know because of these boards. A lot of my monetizing techniques, and income has come with the help of Hackforums.

I am currently two years from being done with my AP Graduate in Marketing Management.

I owe Omniscient, and the rest of the forum, and is grateful for what it has given me.