I knew Divined since my first day on HackForums; he provided me with a spot in the OG Sheepgang. If there's anyone you should be dealing with its Divined. Oh, and he's bringing you a gift if he's selling this for $5k, he could exploit all of you by selling one of his eleven groups for $7k but he doesn't keep that in mind.

Best of luck selling this, Divined. The OCD kicked in. ?

All that did was ensure that no one ends up buying the group. People who have money don't want to spend it here. Well most, not all.

But Price depends on supply vs demand right. If no one's ready to buy a group even at 5k don't you think group owners have to sell them for 4k?

Its because Omni doesn't sell groups anymore so the prices are determined by who owns them. Since Omni won't sell any new ones, the price is high. Its like when companies sell a limited edition item for retail and then resellers jack that shit up by like 500%

In fact we have seen in past history groups given away for free or as a gift only to fall victim to inactivity.

Groups now days aren't what they use to be.

There are still a few good ones but the list is getting thin.

You realize that sounds like an excuse to dump some groups above the price you bought them for. You wouldn't have bought the extra one if you wanted 10. Also if that was your reason you'd obviously be selling it for less so you can get a quick sale instead of a really high price. I expected this though, nothing against you personally.

Good business tactics I guess....

That is not really the case, though.

I am not sure how much was paid for each group, but considering the current prices, the profit wouldn't be much above a thousand dollars.

Just to further stress that point; that is a thousand dollars, or possibly less, profit after a few months or longer, depending on the group sold.

In addition, I am positive that Divined paid more than six thousand for some of the groups, which would invalidate your argument completely.

I have no issue with the man profiting off this. But seriously, what other reason is there out there to buy 11 groups on Hack Forums? Other than to sell them at a profit of course, are you trying to say that he wants to keep the group scene alive and 'cares'?

I've not been here long enough to know, but some people just have money to blow, I don't see how buying a group to sell for profit would be a good idea, not many people have that sort of money to blow on a group on a forum.

Yeah, HF groups in their primetime were definitely more expensive. But in my personal opinion, I feel like the difference between groups dropped and now we end up with like 3 of the same groups, I still have yet to see a group formed around some different interests. Its all either Cryptocurrency, Social, Finance, or "Do Everything" groups as I like to call them. For as long as I have been active I have yet to see a group based on politics, law, or history, I would love to start a group for politics and law but I personally don't see myself throwing $7000 out for a group.

There have been a couple of groups revolving around debates/politics, they just didn't gain much traction.

Yeah and that's what I mean. Debating and Politics are two separate things. While yes, you debate in politics and yes, while you debate politics in debates it's not focusing on the core subject. You could spend years writing about politics, you just have to attract the right people. Would I love to see a Politics/Law group open up? YES. Will it happen? No. Most people* here use groups as a way to make money, a political group doesn't make you money so there's no reason to create such a group unless you are devoted to politics and law (Like me :)) I just enjoy the discussion of politics and law from people of different viewpoints. Very rarely are groups started for not making money. The best one that can come to my head is the Red Lions, a selfless group who only cares about the wellbeing of HF.

This.

I've seen quite a few screenshots of HF members bank accounts over the years (with their permission of course) and can vouch that we do have some very rich people on this site. I'm talking millions. Now whether or not all of those people will have that money in 5 years, who's to say? All I know is that there are a lot of different age groups on here, it's not all just teenagers and people in their early 20's. We have members ranging all the way up to 60+ years old, if not older. And I know one personally who is a very wealthy man. ?

Not to mention one 19 year old at the time showing me a screenshot of over $700,000 in his account.

It's very possible, you just gotta work for it.

Once they were. There has been a period during which Marketers was the only group selling buy-ins ($50) while you had to earn the privilege to join any other group.

We had Legion, Empire, Brotherhood, they hosted some of the most skilled individuals of this board, before their fall.

Illuminati also had a solid business idea, $100 monthly buy ins, 10 slots only. The $1000 were used to fund a monthly contest to promote Legion Sponsored Forum, when sponsored marketplace subforum could be purchased.

Money was redistributed to the community, the community knew those sellers funding the contest where reliable.

Being an Illuminati member was a privilege.

Depends how you use it.

I'm sure there's ways a properly run group could recoup $3,000 pretty quickly. Past is no indication of the future.

You can assign roles to manage the groups. But only 1 user can be the actual owner who takes the decisions about the group.

However not for 7K, not even of 1k

The current market value for Hack Forums groups has significantly diminished.

Why? that's a good question.

Maybe because of the monopoly of groups from one member failed.

Back when OP bought up all these groups they where selling for good money.

Now today? groups are not what they where years ago, It's just a user bar now.

The days of groups selling for thousands of dollars is gone.

IMO: it was a bad business decision/investment to buy up a these groups.

You have a choice to do.

- Keep ownership of all the groups and increase quality to cut your losses
- Sell all of them for a ridiculous price and accept to loose.

Anyone spending that much money should lower risks/ depreciation as much as possible. It is part of being a businessman.

If I buy a wine bottle worth 5000$, I would hope that it doesnt depreciate to 100$ in a few months. I would hope that my friend/family can taste it and talk about it when its worth 7500$.

It's his groups anyways idk why people are making a big deal about it. He can put any price on it and do whatever he wants with them. Hell he can even just kick everyone from all the groups and make them inactive. Groups values were destroyed even before he bought them. :)

Anyone spending that much money should lower risks/ depreciation as much as possible. It is part of being a businessman.

If I buy a wine bottle worth 5000$, I would hope that it doesnt depreciate to 100$ in a few months. I would hope that my friend/family can taste it and talk about it when its worth 7500$.

It is an investment after all. I believe that he can MAKE MONEY out of them instead of loosing a shit ton for no reason.

Stop being a moron.

A group doesn't have to be an investment that appreciates. Every single human being buys shit that doesn't grow in value but they feel it's worth their money because it's just something they desire.

He clearly can afford to spend more money than you on these things.

Why do broke people always want to pretend to be businessmen/investors?

You own a ps4, how much did the value on that go up? None? Wow you're terrible with finances man.

Talking about investments, do you think bashing some random dude on the internet for his spending habits is a good investment of your own time? Sounds like you're terrible at time management. I'm disappointed .

I'm to blame for sparking this shit storm.

This thread was dead until i posted my comments (Page 19. post 186) i never imagined it would be like this.

However, Some of the post/comments have some merit.

I was also going to quote many members here.

Some members are worried about the community?

Some members are worried the groups?

The fact of the matter is.

We as a community (Hack Forums) are going through many changes.

May it be for better or worst. Change is inevitable and is needed.

As for Hack Forums groups? it is what it is at this time.

We share the same thoughts right ? ?

I mean... Omni cant really do much about the situation in fear it would affect their value even more. He knows groups were a big part of activity on HF but cant print more of then.

It is our job as a community to help Divined get his shit back on track.

I am offering a little bit of my time to Divined and I know he's considering it. The problem is that I am looking to make money out of his investment.

Your heart is not in the right place, and Divined could find many people who would spend the time managing the groups out of their own free will just to help out Hack Forums.

Besides, I don't think that's needed, all that is required are some good & active leaders, and whatever Divined does is up to him, but I do agree that we as a community should have some input and I don't think he exactly minds that either, I just feel like we can accomplish this without having to pay money to some random (no offence intended, just stating that I have never seen you show off any exceptional skills at managing a group) guy, running a group is difficult and takes time.

It takes cashflow to run a group of money/fame hungry people.

Why would I put in some time into his groups so he can actually get value back and not have something out of it.

I believe that users who tries to manage group with no money will never accomplish anything worth it.

At present, each group is worth around $5k. I'm not 100% sure about the current market. But, judging by that, if you managed his groups, you would need to 'increase' the values to make it worth it for him and I'm not sure that really happens. Even the best, most high quality groups, sell for the same because people rebrand them anyway.

If you revived the group scene and the interest in that, then it could potentially work but I doubt it'd be that significant.

I do not agree with the value of 5000$.

I wouldn't even lead 1 group but multiple groups and use them in a very strategic way.

I dont care about the lead of group. I care about the finance of his investment. I agree that he could hire people for free to help him. But that has nothing to do with the growth of value.

Groups were valued at a very high price because people were selling buy-in and rebranding. Buy-ins should get back in the game but in a very unique way

I agree that buyins can be beneficial at times. I know some groups have used it to help fund the group so that they can do better activities and thus increase the value.

If you were to sell buyins, who is getting the money? And I think a unique twist on buyins would be needed as they were overdone in the past and that can also be negative.

My reason is that as the site is slowly losing popularity, groups are kind of losing popularity even more so. Less traffic, less people want to join a group. No offer, in business, is a dumb offer. If omni is willing to shell back out the groups for 2k just to keep the price up, then so be it, but groups are not worth what they used to be especially since they are so "exclusive" to people who "know" what they are talking about.

Just because you take your opinion and put it into some phrase which makes it sounds like common knowledge, doesn't mean it's right.

Lots of offers in business are dumb offers. Yours just so happens to be one of the most lowball-ish and dumb offers out there, considering he has a guaranteed offer from the owner of the forum for $2,000, so why would he ever take yours? Hence why it's dumb. Because, the offer was not well thought true, and you didn't consider that fact that he can very easily get 10x more than that from a much more reliable purchaser and I believe MLT is willing to negotiate a price closer to $4,000 anyway, so yeah; that's all.

Its not dumb though. Dumb is just a concept. Just because its a "low-ball" does not mean it isnt worth the cash he is willing to pursue. If I bought a group for 9k. Then waited this long to sell it... And have 10 groups which is roughly 80k+ into a forum that is not really paying back the amount invested, then how can this forum be "worth" the investment when it is slowly but surely not going back to what it used to be because of the formatting and such that this has to offer and that the majority of all the things that can be learned, are already published and all the content made by the users who contributed were banned or repfucked. It makes the server look less that promising espescially when the tutorials are over 5 years old with 0 new comments to bump them or keep them relevant. This is why groups shouldnt even be worth 1k.

You're not getting a group for $300 lol.

He doesn't even have an HF account anymore.

btw, suggest you close this thread and just wait it out till more development is done and you can make your decision about what to do with some of your groups.

There's always one idiot who gives a ridiculous lowball offer, that honestly most users on this forum would outbid (myself included), and then tries to bully/make the owner of the group feel bad to the point that they will hand it over to this guy, but group owners are never this stupid - hence why it never works.

So yeah, very dumb offer.

He could be selling more in the future though ?

I doubt that'll happen Divined is happy with his 10 groups ?

So which group got sold?

Divined - September 29, 2018, 12:26 pm

Sold two groups, willing to sell one more.

What's your price?

EDIT:

After reading through a lot of reply's I know I won't be able to afford it. Ignore this comment. Haha
