Thread: [\[Official\] Res Publica - Superior Sector](#)

Ludicolo - April 19, 2018, 5:01 am

Let us not seek the Republican answer or the Democratic answer, but the right answer. Let us not seek to fix the blame for the past. Let us accept our own responsibility for the future.

Res Publica is a non-partisan political sector in the group Superior. We are focused on discussing the current political climate affecting the world as well as the legality of current bills being considered around the world. We provide an experience that includes meaningful and serious political and law discussion. We aim to have members from all over the political spectrum. Our Sector values free speech and association and does not discriminate based on political views and/or associations. Our current primary countries/organizations of focus are:

The United States

Canada

The United Kingdom

United Nations

Europe

European Union

NATO

This list will be updated every week with new countries that we will be focusing on. Our current topics that we will be focusing on are:

Political Theory

Analyzing different Government/Economic structures

Constitutional Law

Interpreting and Analyzing Supreme Court decisions

International Law and Diplomacy

This list may be changed from time-to-time with new topics to keep our content fresh. We have a lot planned for the next coming weeks and I hope you are as excited for this as I am.

This would be an interesting group, I won't be applying myself because I'm not good at politics in general. Here are my results anyway:

Social Libertarian/Authoritarian: 1.49

Polm. - April 20, 2018, 9:59 am

This looks like an interesting group!

I'm always in for a good political discussion.

I live in Europe, The Netherlands and we always have the same discussions regarding politics. So it would be really interesting for me to hear some new topics regarding this.

I have a few strong opinions about politics, but I'm also willing to admit when I'm wrong.

Thanks for reading, you can check out my results here!

I'm a traditional Marxist-Leninist with slight influence from the anarchist thoughts of Kropotkin. I am very active in the SRPP section. I have made many quality and valuable posts in the section and have extensively discussed political issues from a Marxist-Leninist perspective.

Regards

(Apr 19, 2018 08:40 AM)Ludicolo Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Thanks :) This is probably one of the more accurate interpretations on the compass:Your chart is anything but accurate, how is mutualism to the right? And how is right-libertarianism somehow "anarchism"?

Disparity - April 21, 2018, 12:47 am

Not sure the chart is quite accurate; I'm a Marxist and am definitely not an anarchist.

I'll be very active in discussions and offer a more radical left perspective that isn't quite as popular these days. I'm decently read and have had my opinions tested many, many times and defend them with an open mind and facts. I'm active politically and frequently discuss various issues and am a supporter and (hopefully) future member of my country's communist party.

Looking forward to good debates and discussions and a chance to advocate for the ideal world structure.

Seems like an awesome group of intelligent people, I would love to join. I'll just keep it bland and short. I love debating, talking to members who have strong discussions on Religion, Philosophy, and Psychiatry (rehabilitation).

Thanks for the chance to join a very prestigious group.

Politics and the economy are probably the most interesting topic to talk about.

mvmt - May 27, 2018, 3:50 pm

I really love politics.

My favorite debate is the one of Fortnite vs. PUBG and which is a better game. After playing both games for a while now, I can't help but compare them. I want to start by saying that I love both Fortnite and PUBG and consider them fantastic games in their own rights. However, after playing both games extensively, it is clear that PUBG is a better game, at least for more competitive players. Let me attempt to explain myself.

1. Realism

For starters, I think PUBG is more realistic. I know that 'realism' in gaming a bit of a moot point, but it is still a relevant factor for me. While I think Fortnite's graphics are beautiful, the realistic look of PUBG simply draws me in more. I'm a very competitive person and I like to be fully immersed in the games I play. When I'm pinned down in PUBG I feel a real sense of panic that I just don't get from Fortnite, and I think that largely comes from the visual aspect of the game.

2. First Person Mode

As a competitive player, I also seriously value PUBG's first person mode. I didn't originally mind the third person aspect of PUBG, but once they gave us first person perspective it was impossible for me to go back. The fights are just so much more satisfying when they feel fair. By 'fair' I mean to see an enemy you need to expose yourself in such a way that they can see you also. This is more of a gripe against third person mode in general and less a specific complaint about Fortnite.

3.Strategic gunplay

Building on the competitive argument, I find the gunplay in PUBG to be more strategic and satisfying. Whereas a lot of the strategy in Fortnite comes from building and positioning, most of the strategy in PUBG comes down to how you handle your gun. Do you peak the left or right side of the tree? Do you try to aim down sights or do you shoot from the hip? Single fire or automatic? The questions to answer on the fly are endless and the rewards(or consequences) are immediate.

4.Twice as many maps!

I also appreciate how PUBG has two maps instead of just one. I didn't think I needed another map, but once they added Miramar I realized that I had been craving some diversity. I still like PUBG's old map way more than the new one, but it is refreshing to play on two different maps. If only they'd let us pick which one we play on, but I digress. Fortnite's map is cool, but the fact that devs said they're not even working on another yet is a bit of a turnoff for me. I will admit, though, that the recent update to the Fortnite map is pretty sweet.

A couple final points relating to the game's maps. The bigger size of PUBG maps means you will get more diverse end game situations. Sometimes there will be a final circle where I'll think to myself when I'm in the top 10, 'wow, I've never had a game end here before.' I like that feeling. Finally, the larger map size enables vehicles to be a serious aspect of the game. A lot of people say Fortnite doesn't need vehicles and I agree with them, but I still appreciate how they influence the gameplay in PUBG.

Fortnite and PUBG are both awesome games. I'm sure I'm not the only person who fell in love with the Battle Royale genre when PUBG released and I am excited to play future titles in the genre. All that said, I still find myself firing up PUBG more often than Fortnite and I expect I will continue to do so.

Valentino. - May 27, 2018, 10:37 pm

Not everyone can agree on the same sides when it comes to politics or religion. However, I'm always looking forward to learning what other people think on my opinions and giving my insights on theirs. I've been very interested in politics and people's views on them over the past few years. I'm capable of holding up a debate if I have the right information and find religious debates very interesting, as long as nothing offensive or obnoxious is being thrown at a person. I spend more time than I should on these forums and am constantly on the 'view new' page looking for interesting opinions.

Hey! Free-market libertarian here, obsessed with politics. I'm glad my results appear to be accurate!

I want to be in this group because I believe it will help promote discussion, and civilizations only advance with political debate and discussions! I spend a lot of time on this website expressing my opinions and such. I believe I placed slightly to the right, even though I consider myself a classical liberal, probably due to my thoughts on taxing and corporate compliance. Anyways! I'd be very happy if I'm chosen to be apart of this, and I'd definitely post in whatever subsection/subthread is to exist.
