Thread: Well I'm Nervous \(Officaly Launched My Site\)

G Eazy - April 19, 2018, 1:22 pm

I am meeting with someone tomorrow to talk about opening my own online store. I will be selling Pre-Owned Rolex Watches. I love watches its a big hobby of mind and its something I see myself doing for a very long time. I am meeting with the person I usually buy my watches from to see if he can give me a wholesale price on some watches so I can turn them around and flip them for profit. I am nervous because I am not sure what he is going to say, but I am going to try my best and keep my head held high. Hopefully, everything goes well and then I can get started on creating my website.

(Update) Check it out and let me know what you think I will be adding more watches today as well!

Vitani - April 19, 2018, 1:42 pm

That's actually a really awesome idea dude! I would love to see the website when it's up. Are you planning to sell them mostly in and around your region or are you thinking bigger?

.Bus - April 19, 2018, 1:44 pm

Either way whatever he says, at least you tried. Sounds like you're working towards making living off your own thing, so keep it up.

Good luck with the discussion tomorrow and your online store.

Stendoh - April 19, 2018, 1:44 pm

Good luck! Hopefully he accepts your deal keep us updated

A good idea buddy and very profitable. Smart thinking and you'll get far with it. If you've previously dealt with the guy you shouldn't be nervous. But also it's alright to be nervous, otherwise i'd be nervous for you if you weren't nervous.

Zoomer - April 21, 2018, 12:30 pm

Fear shows insecurity and if you're an insecure individual it picks up on people and tells them you are uncertain about your dedication towards anything.

Example, If you're scared talking to girls, what is the outcome to that? No girlfriend. (girls won't take an interest to you)

A rough example but you get my point.

Congrats! The site copy can use worth though. Your selling $5,000 watches and it doesn't actually "sell" them very well.

Not to mention, you gotta have some authenticity guarantees. That's like the first thing a buyer is concerned about. Put it on the product page of every watch. They care about that, more than getting a measly few hundred bucks off an expensive watch.

Have you even sold a single watch yet lol.

Sorry but this idea doesn't seem that greeat to me really.

Rolex is a premium brand, people who are buying Rolex watches aren't planning to save money. I fact, there is a certain amount of proud to buying a high priced Rolex Watch.

My point is, whoever is willing to pay several thousand dollars for a watch doesn't give 2 shits if he saves 5% lol, people rather buy new, unused watches from the official supplier because there is no risk in getting scammed or getting send a fake china knockoff.

There is a reason those gold apple watches range from 3k to 15k in price, whoever is willing to pay thousands of dollars for an apple watch doesn't care if he pays 12k less or more, he probably has enough money anyway.

That's not what he meant. He meant that the 5% discount or whatever he'd be getting with OP wouldn't be worth the risks of purchasing at OP's store

Why? People who're willing to spend $10k on a watch aren't going to bother shopping with OP just because they can save 5%

Yes, idiots with too much cash don't give a shit if they save 5% by buying an already worn rolex watch.

That is exactly my point. You don't give discounts on premium products which are clearly targetted at the upper middle class and not some wage slaves who need every single penny they can get.

Why should I risk getting scammed by some local, unofficial webshop if I can buy my watch right from rolex with fast shipping and no worries at all?

If you could save 20% or something, that might be worth it to some people. But lmao, most watches are discounted by barely 5%, who is that desperate for 5% on a freaking ROLEX WATCH. Why should I care about saving 500 dollars when I'm paying 7 grand for a freaking watch?

I'm sorry that I'm being realistic, but selling Rolex watches discounted by barely a few percent is just hilarious and such a bad idea.

Hi good luck to you and your site. I'm glad that you found a way to work with your hobby.

Just asking out of curious Rolex is a costly brand and almost everyone who buys a watch will be rich so would they buy a pre-owned product? I read that you are getting a wholesale offer still just wanted to ask.

Because why spend $1000 extra when you can save and get a Pre-Owned I mean some people only buy Pre-Owned I would never buy new because I like to save my money and not spend it like crazy but it just depends on who you are. When you buy Pre-Owned you have a lot of money! And it's in like new condition!

This is awesome bro! Do you have all your social media setup? Also what are you doing for SEO & marketing? And my one tip would just be to add some proof of legitimacy. I know your service is legit and all but if I was gonna drop $10k I would triple check to make sure I'm not o my getting scammed but that the watch is real. Which is going to be hard in your case since you literally just started. Eventually when you have your reputation up and such I can see your site doing amazing. Good job man keep grinding :)

Yes i thought about this that pre-owned can not really be a roughly used one always it can also be like it was unboxed just for display purposes, to show less shipping count in customs etc..

this will be a smart deal for the buyers :) wishing you success buddy :)

i would never buy a second hand rolex from someone with that domain nor would i buy it from a site with such lil input about who they are you got like 10 sentences max about your product

Ganja - April 30, 2018, 4:58 am

Hi man,

Had a look at your website. I think your idea does have potential but your execution really does need some work. Please consider this constructive criticism :);

- Your prices are too high. People who spend $6k on a watch won't buy a second-hand one for only 5% discount. You need to get these prices lower!

- Your website needs a full re-design. Drop this entire template and start by making a wireframe for your website. On the homepage, it needs to be clear to the visitor what you sell and why they should buy from you. Since your products are pretty pricey you need to build trust - and I don't see that happening with your current, very standard, template. I could go into detail about changes you need to make to your website in order to get sales (you need products on homepage, your header is wasted space, the images are obviously stockphoto's, etc) but it's just too much. I suggest reading up on some online-marketing strategies, wireframe best practises, etc.

- I suggest coming up with a more trustworthy name and getting a professional logo.

Best of luck with your venture mate!

Just some advice from someone who does make their own living online--

I'd recommend putting A LOT more effort into each of your products. You're going to have a hard time getting people to spend $8k+ with one semi-okay resolution picture of the product (that was found online) and a little description. Especially if you're selling something used, you should have options like service history, age of watch, how long owned by previous owner, physical deformities (scratches, dents, etc) and plus all the other shit a non-savant in watches wouldn't know about.

Also think your price tag is a little hefty. Most places that sell used items usually are like 30-40% off -- obviously that's different depending on the product, but personally I think your margins are way too high.

It's clean and functions however, so that's great. Good luck to your business, fam. Wish you all the best.

I've taking a quick look at your website and overall it looks good and professional. But to give the website some authenticity, you shouldn't be using Rolexes original images. It is pre-owned rolexes that you sell afterall. :)

Dennis - May 4, 2018, 10:39 am

Your shop is lacking very basic things such as informations about the store owner. Who in their right mind would drop $5k+ on a watch in a store that looks like a shop that looks like it was put together in a few minutes with literally 0 information. Index looks horrible as well. You should look up some books about ecommerce. I don't think that you'll ever get a sale with that shop. Also check out some marketing books such as Launch by Jeff Walker. You have a lot to learn bro.

Keep it up, though. You'll get there eventually.

Hey Lows,

First off, congratulations on taking the steps to start creating a business. Every business starts on an idea and developing an online presence is a key to success. Your site, appears to be a site referred to as a cookie cutter (maybe like SquareSpace). It's very plain. Things that would stand out to me would be a classy logo. This is your brand. Something that goes "wow." This is the first thing I've found users look at. It showcases your work In the first minute. As others have stated, you lack branding. I don't know the owner or anything about the company. How can I justify a large purchase without any knowledge of the company providing me my product? I suggest creating an about us page instead of a FAQ page. This will allow me, the customer, to find out who runs the show and what their goals are with the site.

Additionally, while I see a contact option, including ALL available contact options in a footer is much more beneficial. Expose me to your social media, email, and any other relevant info. At the very least, include social media and email. This should follow me. Some people don't want to create a php generated form for you but rather directly email you.

Your theme is fine and elegant and I don't see an issue there. I just feel like a lack of information is going to bring you down. Maybe create some articles about watches. I'm not familiar with the market nor am I an expert watch analyst however, I'm sure there is TONS of content to produce about watches (functionality, sales, identifying a good price, etc). These things would interest me if I was in the market for a watch.

I hope I gave you some insightful information. I wish you the best.

Much Respect,

Shark

You're wasting your time trying to get sales when instead you should be making your website better.

You can drive 1m+ visits to this website and you still won't get a conversion.

Your cheapest product is $2800, but the website looks like it took $25 to make.

If you wana see some sales you really gotta improve the look and credibility of the site.

Main question I would have is whats my guarantee these watches are authentic? Maybe I didn't browse around enough. I would add a little more info on the FAQ page. On a second thought I would load it up with at least 20 questions people would most likely ask. Also, do you offer a payment plan? I know people do this with phones since they are expensive, I would imagine someone buying a used watch would certainly like the idea.

edit,
whats the condition of the watches? mint? "wear and tear"??

You go into luxury department store, and everything is on sale. Firstly, you're gonna assume either this is shit quality, fake, or the store is going outta business (more likely the latter two, especially on the internet)

You're not gonna trust the store, and leave.

Same here. You're not a walmart, you're reselling luxury watches

whats the condition of the watches? mint? "wear and tear"??
I was thinking about adding a payment plan option but I really don't want to deal with that right now my site isn't big enough yet.

amazing that you have these collection of watches, you must have a pretty big safe haha. Also just wondering how do you know if the rolex's are real, just your experience? ?

Take them apart and look at them inside and out.

Well, I am selling the watches that are on my site so I know that they are 100% real. I am always going to start buying watches from customers so that they can "upgrade to a new Rolex watch"

G Eazy - May 14, 2018, 4:36 pm

I am buying watches as well now!

You think idiots with too much cash and wanna flash off a Rolex wont piss away 10k for a fucking time piece?

You need to adjust your attitude IMO.

as someone that buys alot of watches and probably has the largest watch collection on here can let you know that we really don't care about the extra 5%, i've been offered legit day date's with cert etc for 15% less and i still choose to buy off an original rolex retailer. why? because you simply never take any risks when buying off rolex retailer, but when you buy off resellers (they buy watches for 21-25% less and resell for 10-15% under retail) you can get scammed, get sent fake watch, older models (vintage) etc

I completely understand what you are saying you just are paying a lot more for that "New Rolex" when you can get a Pre-Owned one from me at a decent price.

Kash Money - May 15, 2018, 6:19 pm nice simple design, only issue is that on home page where it has our mission etc looks kinda fake, like something you would see from a website template, maybe its just the images

Price is not decent, i can get a datejust for 25% less brand new and you're selling a pre owned for 5%

Still looking for more opinions on this!

Have you considered renting/leasing watches? With a decent insurance provider and identity verification + credit verification; It could work out.

ElasticWeed - May 17, 2018, 5:38 pm

Great idea!

Here are some initial web design flaws I found though:

1. Get a custom logo. It doesn't have to be extreme or super-clever in anyway, but the current one is a bit too bland in my opinion. Have something that makes the site instantly recognisable.
2. Get rid of the stock photos on the front page. Both the text and images feel very "fake corporate", have something more authentic or simply let the watches do the talking, perhaps talking about the legacy of Rolex watches or alike?
3. Improve the load-time on products page. While I love the simple layout, it really shouldn't take almost a second to load. (NOTE: that might be on my end, seeing as I'm guessing it's hosted on a server in the U.S.)
4. Remove the "FREE SHIPPING" from the products page. It looks tacky, and seeing as you have free shipping on all your products it's redundant to have it stated on every product.
If you want to make it clear, have one image/text on the product page where it states that you have free shipping.
(Crappy font, but you get the idea: <https://imgur.com/a/n2FUkvG>)
5. Provide some company information in the FAQ or contact page. The site has sort of a sketchy feel right now with all the stock images and "fake" ribbons.
Perhaps get a real verification, such as the McAfee SECURE verification. At least then you'll have a real certificate instead of the current made-up one's.

All-in-all though, nice and clean looking website!

I still don't see any company info (org. number, phone number, e-mail, etc.) on either the FAQ page or contact page.

The logo is simplistic but nice! I would perhaps get some sort of logotype/icon as well, but I like the font!

The removal of the free shipping text is nice, looks much better!

I would also re-make the review system. Have a review page for your whole company instead of individual products. It's not as if you have 100 of the exact same watch laying around, so it doesn't make sense to have a review system for each item.

Perhaps remove the "CERTIFIED 100% AUTHENTIC - ALL WATCHES ARE GUARANTEED TO BE 100% AUTHENTIC FACTORY ROLEX." as well?

It looks tacky and feels weird that you would need to have it screamed in your face. Perhaps add a paragraph to your FAQ about it instead if you really want to include it.

Looks better though, keep it up!

Proud of you, anychance you will be stocking new rollies? I want to get one for a mate on their birthday

Btw just slightly worried about you.

"How do I know the watch I buy from your site is real?

All of our watches are certified by our watch experts as a 100% authentic. If you have any suspicions about your watch's authenticity send it back to us at anytime and we will give you a full refund. "

What would you do if someone sends back a 1:1 Visual replica. Or if someone charges back through bank after you have shipped...

I never actually thought about the first question before I will have to take that into consideration. I mean most of my business is going to be local so I should be alright. Chargebacks will be handled by the bank I mean I would copy there ID. Just like I said most of my business will be local.

I'd start trying to make that website pop! Small things really add up. Like adding some vanilla CSS to some objects like box-shadows with a transition. Would make clients feel like the website is a bit more interactive and responsive.

Even if you give ID to the bank they could've claimed they got scammed ETC. ID doesn't instantly prove anything, and it's hard to show proof to a bank as normally they don't give a fuck what a shop has to say

And I prefer to add your products list in an image form (where Add to Cart and Preview button is present there) below the main slider in homepage. About us text should be transferred to About Us page not including it on the home page.
