Thread: [\[Motivating Myself\] My journey on Saving \$1,000 for my dream Gaming pc!](#)

vaxton - April 25, 2018, 8:23 am

It has been almost a year and i'm still trying to save $1,000 to buy my dream gaming pc.
Each time i earn some money, i end up spending them on renting a gaming pc (1$/hour)

I just stopped going out from home and trying to not spend a single $ anymore just to buy it before this summer!

I made this thread to motivate myself to keep working and not waste my time doing nothing.

My journey has started today, i'll post my daily earnings till i get $1,000 in total! and i'll post a video of my new gaming pc once i buy it.

Good luck earning $1300 in two months.

Probably best to limit your spending instead, should be possible.

OP saved up $200 in an entire year, while I agree with you $1300 isn't too hard to save up in two months granted you have the right job it gets a bit harder when you have saved an average of $17 a month for the last year.

So yeah, definitely limit your spending.

i've spent over 5,000$ on renting gaming pcs, food and hanging out in 1 year, i wasn't actually caring about my money.

Don't get me wrong I'm not saying you're bad at saving up money, I spend it about as fast as I get it as well, I can definitely relate. But it's usually a lot easier to limit spending instead of generating new income. Plus there's usually a lot of things you spend money on that after you start cutting out you realize you can easily live without.

Making a financial plan is always a good idea, especially if you're looking to make a big purchase later on. I hope some day I'll live up to my own advice.

PS: Renting a gaming PC, how does that work? How much does that cost? I'm intrigued.

Pre builds are cheaper nowadays because the manufacturer gets the parts at the original price.

Personally I'd get the i5-8600K instead of the Ryzen 5 2600.

Either way, spending $150 on a CPU cooler is retarded when you only spend $200 on the CPU itself.

Get an i7-8700k instead, and add some shitty 240mm water cooler on there instead. The Coolermaster Liquid one is like $60. Should be about the same price for far better performance.

No way you're going to overclock that Ryzen to the same performance an i7-8700k gets you. (Even with spending that much on a liquid cooler, granted you also overclock the i7 albeit with a shitty cooler.)

Anywho, if you need me to look at a few pre-build ones I'd be glad to help you. If not, post them in the pc hardware section. They're great people too.

Sorry but you need to do some research.

The 8700k and 2700 are within 3% in gaming and the 2700 stomps the 8700k in every other task except in Adobe Premier.

Also the 2700 runs A LOT cooler than the 8700k.
