Here's some inspiration

Some medias actually do this sort of stuff a lot - instead of paying $10k for a stat, why not do this?

This guys knows what he's doing though. It's definitely inspiring and offers more insight of what's possible online

Let me know with what you think

That is some really good information. Glad you shared it!

I saw this video a while ago. I think the punchline is that you have to get big pages to feature you one way or another.

I wonder how much did he spend on ads :|

That's what I'm curious about as well. ?

Lovely? - April 27, 2018, 12:58 pm

He spent A LOT on adds or maybe he grew it with his main pages.

He mentioned about networking, but it's not always something one can do, especially with large pages/starting out.

100% can't be his pages. He'd be too rich

If it's growing your own page in 2-5 days to 100k or spending an equal amount of $ on buying a stat of 200k - I'll choose the first one any day

Chief Turbo - April 27, 2018, 1:59 pm

Well, The page right now is at 160k followers after like 5 months so I don't think that's actually worth it.. his page is dead lmao

well he makes thousands out of youtube revenue alone
let alone deals with brands

Many social media experts who have been around for ages have semi big emperiums on certain platforms.
And it's doubtful it's his first 100k+ page if he can grow them in 2 days. And judging on his view (if it's his apartment) he's making plenty of money as it is.

This page is now @160k
Imagine having that view by making money through doing this

He should've mentioned how much he spent on ads or how he got these shout-outs. How much do you think he spent?

I'd say $2.5-5K If all were through paid shoutouts

Woes - April 28, 2018, 2:35 pm

He probably spent so much money on those ads, I've worked with a few of the pages that had promoted his page, and they are not fucking cheap lmao.

Compared to what you'd pay for a stat like that, I think it's reasonable
