You're going to eventually get caught and there will be real consequences. Also as the article states, this school district handled reporting the breach a million times better than most companies.

sssniperwolf - May 19, 2018, 9:25 am

Sad, the kid will have felonies on his record now.

I cant repeat myself enough, fucking with school systems is simply not worth the punishment, they are federally funded machines, making them government property and thus a felony to tamper with in any method. NOT WORTH IT.

It would definitely be a good topic for a sticky though idk if the kind of new members it would help would actually take the time to read it

People have to learn their own lessons, if they do not wish to listen to those who are experienced. (My self included, yea I hacked my school networks too) they will learn the hard way, just as that dude said in the video. Its gonna be a hard road for them now that they have been identified and are now dealing with law enforcement.

Hacking school systems is not like it was back in my day. We used Novell netware and shit, the systems now log and record everything.

Dont fuck around with school systems.

CyberStrike - May 19, 2018, 11:39 am

We do need this stickied in the beginning hacking section no joke, most of them post it in the Virus/Malware sub forum. It seems that it's during midterms and finals these threads pop up they don't know what they are doing and even if they did know, they tend to think it's "nothing", schools take it seriously. It's a bit hard sometimes to dissuade people when another person who knows just enough to give some crap advice pretending that it's easy and no big deal chimes in. I don't want to see anyone here or elsewhere screw up their life, if someone cheats say on a test or whatever they will have to at the very least write the correct answers, they will read the material somewhat, I get that. In the end they are only cheating themselves, not great but you won't have criminal charges and probably be looking for a new school or ending up in a juvenile or adult facility.

I thought about making a fake tutorial title it something like "How to hack school" and just put in as many links to people getting caught for it and what happened with them.

Lynx - May 19, 2018, 12:35 pm

I'd just delete the database which contains the grades... at least make it look like an system error or smthing..

hacking a school means attacking the government, you do the math kiddos

Punisher - May 19, 2018, 1:55 pm

Back in the day I used the cmd prompt to send a net message to every networked computer in the district - it said "Hacked by X" where X was my gamer tag back then. Instantly got a call to the classroom I was in and they said "Immediately check computer #25 and send the student using it to the office". When I got there the principal started yelling at me threatening to call the police to which I replied "but I didn't break the law" and went on to explain that all I did was "use a simple command in the control box". He didn't give a shit and called the local PD down, they couldn't do anything about it except escort me to the parking lot and stood with me while I waited for my parents to show up to pick me up. I ended up getting suspended and lost my school computer privileges but that was it. Funny enough they blocked the cmd prompt and buckled down on security after that. I guess I sent the message to 3 different schools in the district and every computer in every classroom showed the message, a ton of people got freaked out.

Had a guy in my school when i was a kid that "Hacked" the school (Massive security hole that even my dog could "hack") Anyways he bragged about it all the time and told people he would change their grade for 2 dollars or some shit. Spoiler alert he got caught and his family is still paying the fines i think.. It is a very stupid move but kids are generally stupid so this "I hacked my teacher" threads are expected.. Would love to see this as a sticky as it maybe could make someone think twice

o0 Money 0o - May 25, 2018, 11:35 am

Ive thought about doing this, tho for my teachers we use a thing called "progress book" the easiest way would actually be to rat their computers, I have access with a usb all the time, but never have done anything as Im not really good at making rats fud.

If you're smart enough to breach a school's grade system, you're dumb enough to face the charges with it.

Enough said.

maryous - May 25, 2018, 7:00 pm

If they had a good school system where kids love to go to school this wouldn't happen.

usd - May 25, 2018, 9:28 pm

Tampering with school property is obviously too much risk for too little reward.

HOWEVER... I will admit that a certain individual may have used a batch script to get the admin password so they can install vpns. And yes, it was worth it.

Hackforums97 - May 25, 2018, 9:38 pm

i hacked the school db in grade 10, got all passwords and student info in plain text, still use it to my benefits till this date. oh and it told me stuff like medical and mental problems and i discovered one of our friends had autism and it was p memey

If you think about public perception of what 'hacking' is... combine that with the ignorance of being a child... add on the fact that this forum is probably high on Google's ranking for searching things like "How To Hack" etc;

It's bound to happen. You can sticky as many threads and post as many forum rules as you want... There will always be these type of throwaway accounts on this website, posting without searching or reading, and looking for immediate remedies to a complex problem.

Nowadays people act now and think later, sadly these have repercussions that will likely put their life in hell. common sense is becoming rarer and rarer as the years come along. Sad to see young bright minds wasting their potential on useless troll hacks, or just trying to improve their grades. I'm not gonna lie at that age I was considering doing the same, but I learned to think things three times before acting out on it.

For some reason I like you already.

Truth is, I did it myself.

But I did it, like 25 fucking years ago, when technology was in its infancy and no one truly knew what was going on FULLY.

Shits changed, and people who fuck with fire now, better know what they are doing or there are DIRE consequences.

The Technology 25 years can't hold a dime to the technology today. a very small portion of the population know the extents of technology, let alone owned it. The risk/reward level back then was much sweeter than in the modern day. Nowadays even joking about this stuff will get you into some deep situations. I hope the future generations learn from the past generations mistakes and get their stuff together.

CyberStrike - May 28, 2018, 9:30 pm

Well it's just a bad gig, all around let's say someone is successful best case they do it are skilled and don't say anything maybe they get away with it but leave a few accounts here and there then down the road they prune accounts whatever they investigate and little by little it's discovered. Now a year down the road this person with their whole life ahead of them might be expelled or facing charges. Grades matter but not to the point that you screw your whole life up, hell I understand if someone cheats that's understandable a few days of detention maybe suspension. It isn't as serious as ending up in a juvenile facility and perhaps another few years in adult prison.
