Thread: Can't Keep A Job-Girlfriend-Or Hobby Whats Wrong With Me

Rompow - May 21, 2018, 6:50 pm

I'm pretty sure that I don't have ADHD, but there's something really wrong with me.

Jobs I've Had:

Waiter At Two Different Restaurants

Cell Phone Store Manager

Online Tutor

Construction Worker

Landscaper

Thrift Store cashier

Cellphone / Computer software, and hardware repairs.

Amazon FBA

I dislike one night stands, and don't want to complicate my small friendships by adding benefits to them. I get bored of every single girl I date within a month.

I have most of the basic CompTIA certifications, and I have an international language teaching certification. I will soon be getting a CPR certification. I'm fluent in Russian, Spanish, and have started learning Chinese. Oh, and by the way did I mention that I have a guitar coming in the mail just because I saw a guitar fingerstyle cover of believer on Youtube, and wanted to replicate it? I don't think I have ADHD because I wouldn't be able to learn so much without being able to focus. I just have extreme boredom issues.

Now it may sound like I do quite a lot, but my life still feels empty, I have no real friends, no love, no career, and no sense of peace. What the hell is wrong with me. ?

Nothing is wrong with you, you're young. Keep on a good path and trust that everything will play out the way you want and it will :)

Why are you sure it's not ADHD. Before I opened the thread I thought ADHD cause I'm the same (except I was married but my spouse died) but I'm the same with jobs. But Amazon FBA you are in control so you should be able to keep that and it would be a matter of not spending more than you can manage and not giving up and reading more about how to do it.

Oh by the way mate I have a masters degree with an Bplus average in my masters but I DO have severe ADHD we can be obsessive and that's how I did it but it's a different story dealing with employers and ADHD because they won't tolerate it. ?

We can still learn a lot because we're smart and creative and a subset of us can be obsessive. With FBA couldn't you conquer boredom by looking at new products. I don't know I haven't done FBA but looking at it.

Find passion for something, even if it's going to the gym or going out for some fun activity once a week, something to look forward to.

Self-improvement is all about having determination and a clear goal; and don't get overwhelmed - one step at a time.

Identify the things about yourself that need to be changed and work on them one by one. Also it seems you may be depressed, SSRI's are honestly not the worst idea even though they catch a bad wrap from the media.

I wish you the best of luck, life is a struggle; lots of ups and downs. Remember there will always be another up. <3

#Skyline - May 21, 2018, 9:14 pm

Way I see it, you're just too smart, and you're unhappy around people who are not as smart as you. Everyone isn't perfect and we aren't all the same.

Smarter people are often more sadder because the smaller things don't phase them or seem fun.

I got a question to ask.

Do you spend a lot of time on your phone, when you go out to events do you constantly take photos and videos. When you are home what do you find yourself doing? Do you partake in any sports? are you a Smoker?

I want to answer because I want to see where this goes. No, when I'm out at events I hate being on my phone and I hate it when other people are on their phone because it ruins the experience. I either play video games or fuck around with python. I play multiple adult league sports. I smoke a lot.

I was talking about OP I'm trying to get an understanding about him, to try and see what he is doing wrong. But for you are you in a similar situation? Lacking a social life etc? If so Pm me some details I'll see what advice I can give you

Maybe it's best to talk to one of the support groups here on HF, such as the Samaritans group.

No to the phone, I go through those at an abnormal rate as well. Although it's less out of boredom, and more I because I tend to buy them cheap, and resale them before I can even get attached to one. The only electronic that has remained consistent with me is a $20 MP3 player. I did do YouTube videos a year ago, but stopped because I sold my Xbox One, and game recorder. At home I find myself reading a lot of Fan-Faction, and doing MMA workouts as of lately.

Oh wow, I couldn't do that. I had to switch to online school just to be able to graduate because I was missing too many school days, and was pretty much a walking bored zombie at school. This guy will not be stepping foot into any college, certifications, and jobs through networking is my way of life. Amazon FBA does provide a bit of variety, but it can also become a routine. I will eventually have to get back into it though because I have a large closet room full of goods that I need to sort through, and ship out.

Do a backflip and you should be alright.

I'm being serious. Try new things that you think you may not like. You'll develop yourself.

None of those jobs even seem worth keeping. I don't think that's the issue.

I took those jobs for the variety. I know that I could land a job at a large software company, but working for 9-5 on software that doesn't interest me just isn't my thing. In a few years I will be traveling, and teaching internationally. I'm just saving up as much as I can first, and building up my skills. I will also need to land a job with a company that will pay for the more expensive hacking certifications that I need to get so that when I get bored of teaching I can instead be a traveling penetration tester, but that's a couple years out as well.

i have never in my life related to a post so fucking much i am mentally unable to remain with the same thing for longer than a couple months (at a push!) every single girlfriend i've had i haven't been able to remain with, and i dont know why because when i look back nothing was wrong and i couldve/shouldve stayed

Man, I'm not a Playboy by any means yet by the time that happens I will have slept with far too many women. I know that just because you date someone doesn't mean you have to sleep with them, but it's just how I try to progress the relationship. I would be put off by a woman who has slept with too many men so I really don't want to be a hypocrite.

I think you need to introduce Anime into your life at this point, it makes everything better! Also it seems to be that you just can't set your mind on one thing and stick with it, you're all over the place. Anyways good luck.

Anime pisses me off, that's why I turned to fan-fiction. I got into Naruto, and Highschool DXD, and was upset to see that no matter how shitty of a person Sasuke was he still got rewarded over, and over again. Don't even get me started on Issei because I hate his character. Oh yeah, and screw Jaune Arc too.

I've been referred to as a pretty boy. I'm not particularly happy about it, but at least it's a step better than cute. I will one day be only referred to as handsome!

You just seem like you enjoy variation.

It's a normal thing to have.

I don't "suffer" from it myself though. I've been with ONE girl.

Have had TWO jobs and stucked by one because the last job I had was working in a restaurant and it was sold.

SIM-3257834 - May 22, 2018, 2:46 pm

What I see is a lack of focus and dedication... like every HF member it's no wonder they find it to be a norm. You have room to play around up to 24 but after that if you don't have your mind set towards something you're only going to end up a failure.

Covalent - May 22, 2018, 3:06 pm

You are adding more ingredients to your soup right now, and one day a certain interesting person will try to taste your soup.

Boredom can be a defense ...your mind doesn't want to deal with anger ...disappointment or hurt ...so you block emotions and feel bored of the person ... without going into your life in great depth there could be other factors ... good luck in your journey
