There's really no need to buy a web shell, you can easily find plenty on GitHub.

Look at all the little Indian sellers who come out of hiding when someone mentions that they want to buy shells. It's like their dicks get hard and they all flood the thread with their bullshit. How cute.

Also to OP, just use shodan or another api to scan for web servers that you can exploit with a free shell. It's easy and doesn't cost anything.

Here is a big collection of shells, I've successfully uploaded some of these to a few servers (for security testing) and they've never been detected other than it being a .php file.
