Thread: I got a question for anime lovers.

Pronouncer - May 23, 2018, 8:29 pm

So first of all i dont mean any offence by this thread at all. I am genuinely just curious.

So a lil about me i have watched two Anime's both Dubbed Deathnote and Your Name (GF made me watch both), and simple to say i couldnt enjoy the lips not sinking or the animation type, reminded me of Yu-Gi-Oh.

So my question to you guys is whats the attraction to anime? Is it the story line, the animations.

Also whats with all the Pre-Pubescent looking girls in like photos and wall papers. Im not trying to be offensive im genuinely curious, do you guys find an attraction to these characters, which i mean fair enough Kim possible was hot asf when i was a kid.

Thanks

I'm a lolicon call the cops idgaf

SIM-3897961 - May 23, 2018, 9:12 pm

I just enjoy watching it like you would enjoy watching kim possible I watch it to pass the time and I don't beat my meat to it personally but am sure there are some peeps who do that. Also its out of sync because it's dubbed.

waifus?

I don't have to wait for the next showing of an episode for a normal tv show, whereas in anime, i can binge the entire series in a night or two.

Waifu = best girl in anime

Personally i dont understand like, i get that you can like anime, but whats with Weebs and stuff? i dont get it.

Like deathnote and Yourname where oki, i didnt mind watching it but i dont see myself enjoying this type of animation, to me it reminds me of those girls who where all emo in school and tried to be cute by being shy and stuff.

probably because you haven't seen anime that's considered a masterpiece and only watched the ones your girlfriend forced you to.

Well, idk your style.

If you're looking for intense action that has you on your toes, there is an anime called 'Megalo Box' that is currently on Episode 8.

If you want to see a more psychological thriller that takes about 12 episodes to get good, then the remaining 12 are the most insane experience you can imagine, I'd recommend watching Steinsgate.

These are both somewhat short anime, neither have more than 30 episodes, which is what I typically recommend to newer viewers, because no one wants to invest in anything over 100 episodes.

I use kiss anime . ru to watch anime, and if you get kissanime essentials for chrome, that will definitely refine your experience.

Anime makes me cry and feel more pain than any western show I've ever seen.

SIM-3558566 - May 25, 2018, 4:34 pm

You've just got to find your anime style. You may want something more serious and mature. I find it more appealing than regular TV. All I can say is, try watching the top anime (Attack on Titan is really good for first timers and the dub is great).

+1 Anime makes me way more emotional and involved in the story. I usually never cry, but anime has made me cry countless times. Also, badass fight scenes that western shows just can't replicate.

maryous - May 25, 2018, 5:33 pm

I only watch the animes i grew up with like naruto, one piece, dragon ball, etc
I don't seem to like any new animes

So I will try to give you a more detailed response than I have seen so far in this thread.

Dubbed Anime: Most of it is fairly crappy (there are a select few that are very well done, Cowboy Bebop is a good example imo)

Studios that dub anime, like Funimation, try to match up dialogue with the speech animations. This is why dubs take a long time to come out after the original release. They change dialogue from the original Japanese meanings a lot to match timings.

Really the only dubbed anime I watch was older titles that were airing on TV when I was younger (Dragon Ball Z, Inuyasha, PokeMon, etc). I only watch those dubbed because that's the way I originally remember them so the Japanese voices just sound very odd to me.

Attraction to Anime: Story lines - I find many of the stories very refreshing compared to American (where I live) shows that have seemed to copy and paste plot lines. (Not to say a lot of anime doesn't do this)

Animation - Many studios work very hard to make very detailed, breathtaking animations and artwork. I enjoy the hardwork that animators put into a media they love for very little pay.

Culture - I enjoy Japanese culture for many reasons, one of which is the fact that it is so different from America's. Some people love to explore different cultures and watching their media is one way to do that.

"Pre-Pubescent looking girls":

For me at least I enjoy the art style that anime creators have. Plus I think that some of the characters are cute in the way that people find puppies and kittens cute. It's nothing sexual for me. I don't mind if other have sexual attractions to it, as long as they aren't hurting anyone I don't care what people do honestly.

Just hitting on a few points but it all boils down to people like what they like, everyone has different tastes. To discredit someone for having different interests or liking something you don't is just simply ignorant.

I appreciate your questions and general interest in finding out why people enjoy something that you may not enjoy yourself. I hope I have answered some of your questions and given you some useful information.

Mr.Cat - May 26, 2018, 4:42 pm

dont listen to those retards op.. Most anime have actually better plots than movies and tv series. They are very deep with philosophical dilemmas and they make you think a lot about you, your life and how things work in this world. If you start watching anime you will look at the normal tv series and think they are empty, with no potential and generally a disgrace. They are like Rick and Morty but BETTER! That's why we watch them..... xD, JKKKKKKKKK We are all secretly antisocial virgin pedophiles who jerk off to underage animated drawings but they are not really underage because they are drawing so they cant put us in prison yet!!! ahahahahehehhohohihihih ? ? ? ? ?

Easypie54 - May 27, 2018, 11:16 pm

I only watch it for the story. I can't get into fanservice shows

I like anime mostly because it teaches you lessons in some weird ass ways. And when the animation is good, it's sick as fuck. As for the lips not syncing up that's why I watch subbed, and I think the voice acting is better.

Vivirus - June 17, 2018, 4:50 am

You said you don't like how the lips don't sync, right? That is because you're watching the dubbed version.

Try out the subbed version.

For me, story matters the most. I love Animes that is emotional, fighting as well. But ofc, animation also plays a big part. But as i said, Good Story is what i like.

i like the animation and the story, and not gonna lie i love the characters, for example rem from re:zero and i hate the dubbed version, i like the original japanese voice

Some people enjoy rap music, some don't. Some people enjoy playing the clarinet, some don't. Some people enjoy watching anime, some don't.

You're not really missing out if you don't enjoy it, just move on.

kaizama - June 27, 2018, 11:24 pm

I have notice that a lot of you say you like the story, animation, etc. No one mentions the sense of humour in anime. Unlike western t.v shows, anime has no political correctness to tie down the jokes. Dont get me wrong, I like the story and stuff too but the all-around humour is why I love anime the most :)

monsterhunter32 - June 30, 2018, 10:01 am

For me it is the stories and the underlining messages some of those stories have. I hate how hollywood movies are so predictable that you can show me the trailer and I can tell you the ending of the movie without ever seeing it. When I saw the anime Claymore for the first time and saw how they killed off the main character a couple of episodes in, it blew my fucking mind. Even though I can predict most anime now, I still am thrown a curve-ball every once in awhile :) As for the underlining message they teach, many of them you can't help but be motivated after watching them. :)
