A little bit of background... my ex-fiance was a music producer, and he would often have me sit in with him and he would teach me how to create stuff. I would make things sometimes when he was at work. After we parted ways, I bought a little keyboard and secured all the software I needed. I'm used to making LoFi, ambient basic stuff... But I see that alot of people on here like EDM and techno and stuff like that.

So I kinda took a crack at it. When I started making it a few hours ago, it was just going to be a simple beat. But I realized that it would probably be cool if I like, added a drop. I've never actually made a drop before, and I have no experience with wobble bass and stuff like that... the drop ended up being the coolest sounding part though, in my opinion.

If anyone wants to use this for whatever you want, you can. If anyone else that produces music wants some, like, cool paid sample kits... I have quite a few.

Here it is, though:

I quite like it and i normally do not fancy this kind of music - so that is cool!

Some volumes of some 'effects' seem a little loud though imo.

I have to say it sounds pretty cool even though I never listened to this kind of music..

Thanks. :3

And yeah, I had to originally mix this with the volume pretty low. When I went back and listened, the second half was quieter so I boosted some of the inputs in a vain attempt to even it out.

Ahh that makes sense.

I used to screw around in cracked FruityLoops a few years ago. Is that still used?

I'm honestly not sure. I use a program called Reason.

I really don't even make this kind of music, I just use Reason to record and mix my ukulele covers.

I am in the mood of mixing some shit up now too, hah!

Got a link to any of your covers? ?

I will make something just for HF and put it on my new YouTube... the last hacking community I was apart of, I was threatened with DOX'ing, presumably after posting things that could be linked to me.
