Thread: R3KT Promotion Disabled

Omniscient - June 12, 2018, 10:20 am

I have disabled the promotion into the R3KT group. This means no new members can be added to the group at this time. I am considering deleting the group but for now I have just suspended new promotions. Obviously with the new reputation policy changes there has to be some consideration to how it effects this group promotion.

Thank you.

Very much understandable, but I think that was the last valuable thing people aimed for with rep Omni.

Understandable that you'd disable the promotion into it, but it would be really nice if people that already have it could keep it for memories sake :)

The group would definitely need to be restructured but I think having a similar group that members can somehow work towards is still a good idea.

Maybe if prestige is re-worked, which you may already be considering, the group could be based more off of that.

Nothing is ever fair, honestly I don't understand why everyone is upset on the rep reset...

I don't really care, yeah it sucks that I had some amazing rep that staff given to me that was lost.
However I don't care nor am I going to cry about it.

The only rekt feature that I use is the +4 and -4. Which honestly doesn't even mean that much to me. It's just nice to have.

This, it's a milestone. Just because one of the entry stipulations changed, doesn't mean you have to get rid of it completely.

I'd just find something to replace the rep requirement.

Thank you.

I would like that r3kt member stay but why not to become r3kt in another upgrade.

The old members that are already r3kt can keep it but r3kt as new upgrade can cost $50 or $100 in any crypto that is allowed.

It should be now for members that are willing to support HF and if it's price goes up to $100 USD then you could create sub forum only r3kts or something so.

Even if you does not like the idea of a subforum I would buy r3kt upgrade for $100 ETH soon.

I mean, once the rep4rep hype dies down R3KT is still going to be hard for most people to get into, and it's something nice to work towards. Maybe up the requirements a bit, prestige, reputation and post requirements or something.

Truth - June 12, 2018, 1:32 pm

Yea, I feel the rep4rep spam is caused by people wanting to meet the rep requirements for the rekt group. Other than that there is no point in rep4reping or getting rep

Hope you don't get rid of it tho, maybe just change it

mrnapolean1 - June 12, 2018, 1:42 pm

Damn no goal to aim for. May I make a suggestion? Since you increased the Rep requirement for Ub3r from 25 to 100, maybe you could increase the Rep Requirement of R3KT from 1,000 to say 2,000 and keep the group.

EDIT: or make it prestige based. Like 500 Prestige?

JoshAllen - June 12, 2018, 2:00 pm

I always liked the idea of r3kt.

It's a nice "goal" for members.

As well, I would say it helped with activity and more of a reason for people to participate.

EDIT: I would like to agree with others and to base the group off of anything besides rep.

Niko - June 12, 2018, 2:04 pm

A new r3kt would be nice, one that perhaps reflects post count, threads, join date etc.

Something similar to prestige, but without rep being taken into account.

Trust - June 12, 2018, 3:07 pm

Hmm, I'm not 100% sure how I feel about this for the time being.

I've given six years of my life to this community and have made many attempts to invest in it's growth. I earned my reputation through years of interactions with other members and I legitimately loved looking at my reputation, not for the numbers, but for the comments contained within. Sure, there were a quite a few of your standard, "Lolol here's green apples.", but there were also quite a few that re-affirmed why I was a part of this community and that let me know that my time here was valued. The R3KT usergroup, in my opinion, was a great way to show appreciation to the users that invested most into this community and it was a neat little way of identifying who was who. Now, I'm still in the usergroup, but with rep being gone and me being inactive for a bit, it's more just a cool userbar than an actual commemoration of my time and investment in Hack Forums.

This all being said, I am 100% for it and rep being restructured. There were plenty of users here that amassed meaningless rep and posts while posting not-so-quality content for years. My only advice would be to keep us all updated every step of the way and involve the users who have been here for a while and have invested in this community day in and day out. I always thought of R3KT as not much, but it was a way to commemorate years and years of time and effort in this community and I still believe there should be something to reflect that.

tl;dr // Keep R3KT, but take time to restructure it to have something that truly and sincerely commemorates users that have been here forever and have invested in the community.

Regards.

webdev77 - June 12, 2018, 3:32 pm

I know that we as users are not owed anything, but I would hope that R3kt or similar remains in existence.

I don't really care about the reputation system being changed since that could be good for the site. I would be pretty disappointed to see the removal of an honorary group unless there is something to replace it.

SIM-1166170 - June 12, 2018, 5:03 pm

You should really just leave it alone for the time being. The ones who did earn it should get to keep it, and if in the future you want to add another or change the requirements it will still be there.

But do what you want, boss man.

Those dudes also had 500+ reputation before, and are high quality users.

But I agree with the fact the R3kt shouldn't be based on reputation. Anybody can simply do rep4rep and get it. R3kt is suppose to be meaningful, not just something your average user gets.

Perhaps it could be a rank that is given out by any staff member to notable members that meet the other requirements.

I've always been a huge, "It's his site, he can do what he wants."

Personally, speaking -- this sucks. I don't ask for rep, rep farm, or really care about it, but literally like 100s of vouches over 7 years for myself and service over the years is flushed.

Just kind of sucks. There are others who have it way worse, but like damnnnnn. Then replacing it with this childish repfarm shit is annoying, useless and feels like a kick in the nuts since I'm definitely not gonna go around asking a bunch of 16 year olds for some green numbers lol.

Oh well, life goes on.

I hear you dude. I for one never complained about this new contract system, yet have to face the punishment of the emotional (and probably young) minority.

Once I had 400 rep, then I got RK'd for making a "bad" suggestion. Now, after a year & 6 months, I lose 500 rep, most of which were vouches from users that used my CE service. It feels bad to come back to HF after a break due to college courses to see all my reputation gone so suddenly. The reason behind it was even worse. It wasn't because I did anything.

And yeah, the way I view it, reputation is literally meaningless now. I am not talking about it being meaningless now because of not having R3kt, but the fact that people can make a big ol' skype groupchat and start doing Rep4Rep. Or do a giveaway for rep...

Green numbers are pointless. Before it gave you prestige and - let's be honest, it made you more trustworthy. If I went on someone's page after reviewing their Trust Scan and saw -10 rep with "DWC" multiple times, i'd know to not deal with them. If I see someone with 1k reputation with things such as, "10/10 - smooth exchange!" and all else checked out, I'd trust them.

Of course I am not just going to deal with someone off their reputation or their reputation reasons, there is more to it, but it was def. a large part of the equation. And yes, I know, you can always get minimalist to do a MM deal <3.

As you said, others got it worse, but It definitely does not feel good to see everyone's appreciation for my service be tossed out the window. It'd be cool if there was an archive of everyone's old reputation to see.

Not sure why Omniscient seems to listen more to the negative than the positive.

I actually like the idea of a contract system... it separates the marketplace from the rest of the forum.
