Thread: Wordpress Backup gets me banned on wordpress!

Biker BoyZ - June 29, 2018, 6:49 am

Since my website was banned on word press for violating terms. but i have a backup of it and want to use it on new wordpress.

is there a way to bypass my backup so it thinks its a new clean backup and wont trigger the violating terms?

this would help me out alot than redoing the whole site since it has alot of content.

Well, identify how you violated the terms - then edit the backup locally to fix this

Get a self-hosted version of WordPress and upload the backup.

i dont know how to identify. it was used in a CPA Niche. (Multi niche site)

I think i know what it was but how do i remove it?

edit the XML and remove?

when i upload. it instantly violates like it knows the the backup.

I was thinking this but problem is i dont want to host myself for certain reasons.

Wordpress is a perfect platform for SEO in Google. Ranks so damn easy compared to PHP / HTML Sites. im on the wordpress.com host. not hosting myself at the moment.

Why the fuck would you host with wordpress themselves?

i used it to test out my site and it went really well. alot of traffic. then it got banned after a few months. i never knew it would work out. so buying my own host is the only way? i was experimenting at that time. then it just exploded with no 1 in google.

Using wordpress.com hosting itself or any connecting plugins that give information is not advised when you are breaking their T/OS

They are notorious for reporting misuse to authorities.

No reason why it wouldn't. It's being blocked by wordpress.com's hosting services - only possible way for them to do anything further would be to push an update log to like everyone who already has wordpress/gets it in the future and blocks some aspect of that backup. That's just retarded and no chance of them doing that.

If they have plugins you use, you might want to try get a copy and not have them connecting outwards when possible - minimise your footprint a little, it is possible they 'could' block plugins working they host to your backup but I highly doubt it.
