"It is a center of Cybercrime", I wouldn't really put that on there.

Well that page is doing a great disservice to HF. It's perpetuating the idea that we're all evil hackers trying to exploit grammies.

This is retarded. The page is poorly written, not factual at all, and is really giving the site an image that Omni has been trying to shake off for years now.

Also, why the hell are those events listed from newest to oldest. It just feels weird reading recent stuff and going back, doesn't tell the story. It should be oldest to newest.

Also, that security breach in 2016 NEVER happened. Sure, an email was sent out, but it was later confirmed that Omni had got it wrong.

Who writes this shit, LOL??

Fine. "It is both a center for computer education and cybercrime.".

Again though, literally every form of "cybercrime" is forbidden on HF.

I am not even going to start arguing with you. Don't like what you read? Edit it. But do know Wikipedia has a policy that says; I don't give a fuck about your opinion, the information you're going to add has to be from a reliable source.

I bet few members remember back in 2010 when we were actually going back and forth with Wikipedia because they wouldn't let a "Hack Forums" page exist. I participated in that debate back then and you should be able to access it here:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Wikipedia:Articles_for_deletion/Hackforums

Here are some relevant threads too:

<https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=423375> (look at that first poster ?)

<https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=423292>

<https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=1327070> (creation of HF Wiki team a year later)

So take that as a lesson... don't put amateur content on a Wikipedia page. You can ruin it for HF.

I wasn't really around, actually read about it very recently.

But anyway, Omni noticed loads of these accounts being logged into and didn't know why, so he assumed someone had dumped the database because the accounts which were stolen did not have 2FA enabled.

Turns out, someone found a way of logging into accounts, but 2FA did in fact block it, not exactly too sure what the method was, I've seen 2 contradictory statements from Omniscient I think, one suggesting it was simply cracking accounts, and another one suggesting it might be an actual exploit, because I believe Omniscient gave the attacker (a notorious multi at the time) his own Ub3r account with plenty of awards to thank him for telling Omni how he did it.

(Aug 8, 2018 04:38 AM)lcy20 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) On Monday, 26 February 2018, Agence France-Presse (AFP) reported[4] that Ukrainian authorities had once again collared Kapkanov, who was allegedly living under a fake passport in Poltav, a city in central Ukraine. He marketed the Remote Administration Tool (NanoCore RAT) and another software licensing program called Net Seal exclusively on Hack Forums.[5] Earlier, in December 2016, the FBI had arrested Taylor Huddleston, the programmer who created NanoCore and announced it first on Hack Forums.[6]

On 21 October 2016, popular websites, including Twitter, Amazon, Netflix, were taken down by a distributed denial-of-service attack. Researchers claimed that the attack was stemmed from contributors on Hack Forums.[7]

On 22 September 2016, majority of websites were forced offline after being hit with "Mirai," a malware that targeted unsecured Internet of Things (IoT) devices.[8] The source code for Mirai was published on Hack Forums as open-source.[9] According to the documents unsealed by the federal court on Tuesday,[10] Paras Jha (21-year-old from New Jersey), Josiah White (20-year-old Washington) and Dalton Norman (21-year-old from Louisiana) were indicted by an Alaska court last week on multiple charges for their role in massive cyber attacks conducted using Mirai botnet.[11] In response, on 26 October 2016, Omniscient, the administrator of Hack Forums, removed the DDoS-for-Hire section from the forum permanently.[12][13][14]

On 14 January 2016, the developer of MegalodonHTTP DDoS Botnet was arrested. MegalodonHTTP included a number of features as "Binary downloading and executing", "Distributed Denial of service (DDoS) attack methods", "Remote Shell", "Antivirus Disabling", "Crypto miner for Bitcoin, Litecoin, Omnicoin and Dogecoin". The malware was sold on Hack Forums.[15]

On 15 May 2014, the FBI targeted customers of a popular Remote Administration Tool (RAT) called 'Blackshades'.[16] Blackshades RAT was a malware created and sold on Hack Forums.[3]

On 12 August 2013, hackers used SSH brute-force to mass target Linux systems with weak passwords. The tools used by hackers were then later posted on hacking community, called, "Hack Forums".[17]

According to a press release[18] from the U.S. Department of Justice, Zachary Shames developed a keylogger in 2013 that allowed users to steal sensitive information, including passwords and banking Credentials, from a victim's computer. Shames developed the keylogger known as Limitless Logger Pro, which was sold for $35 on Hack Forums.[19][20]

Why did you copy-paste from the article? Lol.

Correct if I am wrong but there's no mention of Hackforums being connected to RazorCrypt in both articles, right? So it doesn't pass the Wikipedia's Notability requirement. This doesn't mean I am 100% sure. You may try adding content to the article as you see fit. I won't revert it but I can't guarantee others won't.

Yes, you can mention the owner's real name if it's necessary without referring to any article as source. But you can't add Omniscient as the owner name, lol. Let's say someone wrote an article on Hackforums and they named Omniscient's real name as something else, and the article was from a reliable source. Then even if I knew it was incorrect and if someone replaced the current owner's name, I wouldn't be able to revert it. That's Wikipedia for you.
