

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Is there any way to recover a Fake Facebook account with 2FA?

PervCoke - July 25, 2018, 4:00 pm

Tittle. Basically I created the account for a game. Somehow it got 2FA but I don't remember ever using a phone number on it which means every time it asks me for a code, I get none. It has a dummy name so my ID won't work at all when sent to them, it also has no friends or anything that can verify it's mine.

I have access to the mail linked to the account and have the password for the account itself.

TL;DR: I'm stuck at 2FA, is there any way to bypass it?

dvlpr - July 25, 2018, 9:44 pm

(Jul 25, 2018 04:00 PM)PervCoke Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Tittle. Basically I created the account for a game. Somehow it got 2FA but I don't remember ever using a phone number on it which means every time it asks me for a code, I get none. It has a dummy name so my ID won't work at all when sent to them, it also has no friends or anything that can verify it's mine.

I have access to the mail linked to the account and have the password for the account itself.

TL;DR: I'm stuck at 2FA, is there any way to bypass it?

You have two options.

1. By calling facebook, they can actually help you. Claim you have lost the phone associated to two-factor authentication.
2. If you use a device that is already been marked trusted by facebook security, log in using the details you have, and it will allow you to skip two-factor authentication for a limited amount of time (which you can then disable it).

If you knew the phone number, i.e it was your cell phone number you used, then the phone company could send you a new sim card which then would prompt the code on a separate phone. Unfortunately, it sounds like you do not have that luxury here.

Chances are you exhausted both possibilities which only renders the account useless and unfortunately, there is nothing more you can do.