Thread: Mirai Botnet \(New Private Source: Selfrep/ No-Kill\)

MELTED_NINJA - July 28, 2018, 12:41 pm

I have a NEW Private Source Code for Mirai which includes extra foldes and files, does anybody know how to set these up?? It's not leaked yet so I'm wondering if anybody who has one of these somehow knows how to set it up properly!

Link to an image of the Source Code, Can't post images or links yet so the link is split up: https://paste board. co/HwAlxs6. png

Lmfao you sir are ignorant.

Paras and Litespeed were the "Creators" of Mirai, that does not mean they did all the work.

The summer of 2017 Paras little crew was competing with Spencer's.

Spencer outclassed Paras in both intelligence and his ability of bringing in bots.

Paras was salty af and started BKing the whole net.

10/10 quality shitpost, spencer is an idiot. Mirai had more bots, could scan faster, and had private vulnerabilities that to this day haven't been disclosed. All that was done in-house. spencer's copy pasted bot, and all other IOT bots at the time, were outclassed by Mirai by a long shot

Clearly you've never heard a recording of yourself then. There's ample supporting evidence for Mirai being better all over the internet. Anecdotal evidence and hearsay don't cut it unfortunately

Just one, of many supporting links:

<https://www.flashpoint-intel.com/blog/cybercrime/mirai-iot-understanding-ddos-impact/>

Quote:Mirai is different because it was truly designed from the ground up by someone who most likely had a formal education or coding experience. It was likely written by people who had prior experience with the gafgyt malware family because it contained design solutions that addressed the major problems that gafgyt operators had to face. It incorporated many of the design features that the fittest malware species in the IoT space were already using. It also incorporated anti-analysis tricks against the techniques used by defenders at the time, which showed an awareness of how IoT botnets were being fought against.

Quote:When the owner of this botnet wrote a July 2016 Hackforums thread named "Killing all Telnets", he was right. Our intelligence around that time reflected a massive shift away from the traditional gafgyt infection patterns and towards a different pattern that refused to properly execute on analysts' machines. This new species choked out all the others.

There is virtually no reputable source claiming otherwise, apart from some random guy (you) on the forums yelling into the wind
