Thread: Can I Report Threats From Previous School Year?

xShadowAlk - August 2, 2018, 5:13 am

There's this guy at my school that I had 6/8 classes with last year and he was really negative towards me in all of them. Several times he told me he hopes I go kill myself and that he will make sure I kill myself. I don't understand why at all. Despite his negative comments I was still nice towards him. He seemed to have just whimsically decided that he just hates me and tells me this all the time. I found out I will have even more classes with him this upcoming year and I am planning on telling the school administration about last year. (I understand all the people who think you just need a "thick skin" but I put up with this kid for a whole school year already and I'm not going to just put up with it for another year.)

Before I do this though I wanted to ask if there is anything the school can do about stuff that occurred last year? I was hoping this guy would be gone from my life after 1 year but it didn't work out, so I never reported it. I also want to know if anyone else has gone through something similar and, if so, how did it work out?

Yeah i would. I would recommend getting your parents to speak with you (if you're underage) to prove the legitimacy and the seriousness of it. You'd probably get (or him) put into a different class

I agree with what Tick said, go speak to your parents and get it sorted bro

Yes report him. You seem to handled all the negativity well, don't let it get to you man. He will be in a lot of trouble as schools do not take these situations lightly.

Report him for bullying bro, he will definetly get suspended. It is not some small offense either.
