Thread: I'm extremely hardworking; I want to be wealthy.

Scaryzu - August 6, 2018, 5:31 am

Hi there,

This is my first post on this website and hopefully something can come of it :).

My ultimate goal is to become successful and wealthy, success being the most important. I measure success in happiness; I believe that being happy is more important than being wealthy. However, wealth is a key to success, as it eliminates a lot of unneeded stress, but I can also appreciate stress as a motivation tool and something that is required to achieve success. I'm extremely hardworking and will give 200% to whatever I do and go at it non-stop until I succeed... The only issue here is, I am unemployed and pretty much broke with absolutely no idea where to begin. I am 19 years old and intend to change my circumstances one way or another.

I understand that I'll have to work a job temporarily if I cannot find a way to create startup funds to begin my journey down the path to success, but I was hoping that somebody here could stick their hand out to me and jump-start this journey by guiding me and teaching me. I understand this is something that people pay for and even feel 'cheeky' asking for such a thing, however, I believe this single post is a step in the right direction and could possibly birth something fantastic.

So, would anybody like to be a mentor to a potential golden goose? ;)

Thanks a lot,
Scaryzu

Other than being a hardworker, what other skills do you posses?

Zoomer - August 6, 2018, 5:38 am

This is all going to be an assumption on my behalf so pardon and correct me if i'm wrong,

You're 19 years old and you have absolutely no skills, find a sector you want to grow in because there are many paths you can follow.

No money? Try an unemployment office, get a job.

99% of everyone on this forum is like you and all they do is browse on this forum and post 'im soooo bored or I don't know what I can or should dooooo' <- lazy bums with no skills.

What is it you do then Zoomer?

I have great communication skills, I'm great at influencing others and persuasion (helpful in sales/getting myself into good situations), I would also consider myself an expert in social media marketing (I have had massive success in this field 2 years ago - spent all earnings as I had no experience with $), I am also a quick learner.

Doc- - August 6, 2018, 5:51 am

Start at the bottom like everyone else did originally. Don't be one of these people who think that they are way over-qualified to work a 9-5 as a store clerk and that they are entitled to earning thousands of dollars a week just because they believe that they have that potential in themselves.

Do what the above poster said. Go to an unemployment office and look for a job. Always have a Plan B, don't be looking for shortcuts to success when you aren't even employed.

Listen mate, I landed the job I have today by emailing the CEO of the company and asking to go to coffee. The first thing you need to do is sell yourself. Go out to the real world and make your start then come back here when you have a foundation.

Zoomer - August 6, 2018, 6:56 am

Step 1: Get a job (a 9 to 5) not an hocus pocus internet job that doesn't exist. (or a part time job if you go to school)

Step 2: Learn the value of money and how hard you have to work in order to get it. This will learn you not to spend every dime you have on every dumb idea you get in your head.

Step 3: Once you have worked a couple of years and were smart enough to save money, you can look into starting your own venture. (whatever the hell that may be)

Right now you're too young, too ambitious, too dumb and definitely not qualified to do anything on the internet.

Good luck.

(Aug 6, 2018 09:34 AM)Bromden Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Zoomer makes loads of sense, especially in step #2.

Just try and a be a little more kind, dont call him dumb, that's degrading.

well it's not meant to be degrading but I also believe in tough love, I don't wanna cuddle people into hopes and dreams or give them a false sense of reality. I'm not the type that says hey you'll make it buddy hang in there, I say it exactly how it is.

See most people on this forum may have found a little niche or a product that they can sell and make money from. And here you are looking at them thinking..

- Why can't I do something like that?

- Why can't I sell a product and start my own business online?
- Man I wish I could be those guys

Here is why they can do it and make it "appear" to be successful, here's reality..

- They have no responsibilities
- They live at their parents (no responsibility)
- They don't have any bills to pay (no responsibility)
- They have all the time in the world (no responsibility)
- Their real reason why they can do it is because their mommy and daddy allows it/makes it possible for them to jerk around until real life hits them in the face when it's time to move out. Suddenly their netflix sales or their fucking jerk off pictures they sell become obsolete.

If you can manage to find 1 job you're already out performing each of these people on hackforums, handsdown all of them.

This message is meant for all the young people who are feeling this way.

Work for your future, work for a meaningful life.

At first, I thought you were a little bit of a dick, but I really appreciate this post. I have no issue with finding a job, however, I really do not plan on working until I'm 65... I had a taste of success in 2016, where I had an online business that did really well, making almost 6 figures in the space of 2 months; this sounds like absolute bullshit, but it's true, and due to my arrogance and little respect for money, I managed to spend everything I had on utter shit within the space of a year. I disagree with your "unqualified to work on the internet" comment, but I agree with everything else.

What I am looking for is another income stream, on top of the job in which I will soon have (hopefully!) to add to my starting capital to build the business with an idea in an untapped market, which I am extremely passionate about.

So 2 years ago when you were 17 years old, seeing you're 19 now. You made almost $100,000 dollars in less than 2 months time?

So from the time of when you were 17 to now 19, you completely wasted "all" of your "money"?

Yep that is a complete bullshit story.

@OP Have you tried trading? Whether Stocks, Commodities or any other asset class?

mvmt - August 6, 2018, 11:47 am

A lot of what Zoomer says is true, but working a bullshit job for X years will give you no skills other than responsibility and maybe money management. You're still young, I assume you live on your parent's paycheck (which is not to be ashamed of), take advantage of that and learn as much as you can now. At this age, you're able to take risks with your money because if you fail, you aren't out on the fucking streets.

Assuming what you said is true about your earlier ventures, it doesn't make sense to me why you would just stop after making so much money in such a short amount of time. It also doesn't make sense to me why you wouldn't do anything in the 2 years in-between. It also doesn't make sense to me why you wouldn't use those skills you previously had to do something again now. Get a job to build capital and in the meantime, there are several online ventures you can start with very minimal upfront costs + you can continuously learn from online resources.

You are a bloody retard who didn't even read his initial post, he has no skills in any kind other than some social media. Go predict cough gamble your futures and stocks see how that works out for you in life.

But you two actually suit eachother, both delusional.

Yikes -3 i'm quivering!

"oooooh he -3" repped me" bro you made my day, you just proved me and everyone else what a delusional fool you are.

You seemed somewhat mature and logical at first but you just lost it there, don't pick fights on a forum.

And you're calling institutional investments a gamble as if it were a casino game where the house always wins, there goes your credibility as well.

And so what brokers (as i call the house) never win? That's right they always win as well.

The rest is just a prediction just like the bet you place at any casino.

The more you post, the more its clear you're typing this from your 9-5 cubicle because none of your business ventures worked out.

Diverting the subject, it's okay you had no other way to go about it.

@OP good luck with everything. Try not to lie too much in the future!

Yep that is a complete bullshit story.

It's entirely true... I used to scam people on Runescape using my influence/persuasion skills over Skype, to which I acquired funds to invest into a web developer; I had the developer develop me a CSGO gambling website during May of 2016; I then sent emails out to influencers on YouTube to promote said CSGO gambling website; I got in touch with a relatively "small" influencer, to whom I made a deal with (upgraded affiliate system for him to make % off his follower's winnings) and got him to make a video for free; the site took off with that video and made me a lot of money to invest into further promotion; the site shut down towards the end of June after the Valve letter was sent out; I cashed out north of $50K, which in that market is tiny compared to what others earned.)

During this time, I learned management skills from managing a team of X around the globe consisting of a lead backend developer, two junior backend developers, a frontend designer, an assistant-manager, as well as a marketer. I also learned the value of money; I began partying an awful lot and throwing parties, as well as holidays, all of this inc the price of the drugs I was taking at said parties, which is how I spent the money mainly.

This story is entirely true; I have admin panel photos to prove it, etc.

I however, didn't come on this forum to 'brag' about my past, as ultimately a fail, which I am ashamed of, just do not doubt the fact that I'm competent....

@OP Have you tried trading? Whether Stocks, Commodities or any other asset class? I feel like trading is gambling, I'm unsure about it. I also don't have any assets or funds to start, but I'd love to learn, as it would open doors to potential opportunity I suppose.

This thread went wild. I think everyone has their own perspective on life and money and that is what ultimately will kill your drive for success.

Instead of asking questions openly to people you do not know, ask the questions to the right people. This means surround yourself with people you want to be like and grow with them. Some people are set in the mindset of a middle/poverty class life and their beliefs are limiting.

OP, you're doing the right thing by taking action and trying to find out more information but be more careful where you ask it.

DawnOfTheDead - August 6, 2018, 10:44 pm

If you want more money.. you need some money first. Get a job buy some stuff online and make money with it blackhat way's.

For more money you need to invest money. Run a botnet and sell items tru your own online shop. Or run some service that can make you some money.

SIM-3903705 - August 7, 2018, 4:22 am

@OP very nice thread of you to start, first of all.

Secondly of all, I believe you have more skills than you write here - do not limit yourself.

Most of the NEET's here are constantly searching for a way to make an income online. Same goes for me. My best guess would be either online hired work or an online store - Shopify perhaps?

Best of luck.
