I am currently starting to flip items that sell for around $2k that have very little supply, but very high demand.

Do you guys do anything similar? I am buying them and selling them for $400 higher locally on CL.

Edit: Part of this is to see if you guys enjoy flipping too! Join the conversation!

My stock is much cheaper, more like $1 for a $10 profit. Never tried selling something worth more than a couple hundred. Not exactly sure what you're flipping on CL for profit, I've considered parting out cars but decided against it. Are you selling fake fashion wear?

No the items I am selling are genuine items that just pop up very infrequently (a couple a week online in my area). I just offer to pick them up immediately with cash for a lower price.

I don't actually, but that seems like a great investment and profit maker!

Yeah I did this a bit with cheaper items, went good. Keep an eye on keeping enough 'spending' money instead of cashing out profits.

Flipping PC parts is a great way to make some money. You can even buy whole computers and part them out.

I've never thought about doing this even tho it does sound very good.

Never really thought about stuff that I'd be able to flip tho.
