Thread: Forming a 5 man group for programmers that want to collaborate.

NoK17 - August 17, 2018, 4:16 am

I want a team for people who are willing to work together in order to develop various tools, whatever they may be.

For instance, I'm coding a CPU based SHA128-512/MD5 hash cracker ('Meth'; it works on the statistical probability of passwords) right now!

If you want to work together on similar tools:

PM me / comment and say 'hello'

I will send you a discord, and we will get to know each other!

If you are worried about your anonymity, use I2P/TOR or a bullet proof VPN / chain of proxies. I expect this to take months, it does not matter how old this thread is, PM me anyway, I will be waiting.

25 post limit on PM'ing.

I did not realize this at the time.

I'll continue helping people on the forum, then I will hit you up :D

Does this mean I get to ask other developers to work on things I don't want to do myself, or?

The only replies you're going to get are from members who've finished a Codecademy HTML tutorial and want to be silicon valley programmers now.

Its not black hat at all, it is whatever you want it to be, that is up to you. We are as of current working on individual projects.

We just talk about cool topics and fuck about.

This group is not for people who want to make a botnet and then sell it on some skid forum.

It is more for the people who want to find new topics to take an interest in, and just want to work on chill projects with other people that share the same interests.

On a sidenote, why the fuck is everything about money here?
