Thread: Contract suggestion - private paste.

Mr. Robot - August 28, 2018, 12:46 pm

I'm suggesting in the contract part of HF there to be a private paste that only the seller+staff can see - this way when a contract is started, there is a way to verify the information transferred.

In what cases would this be useful? Just asking

The contract terms exists to provide details and valuable information before a deal is done. You also have the option of keeping your contract private (unless a dispute is created).

Yes but what if you want to make a public contract, but hide information before a contract is started/payment is sent. That way the information provided is what the user intended before the deal was made.

IDK, it really just sounds to me that you just want a private contract then. Would this information be available to the other party in the contract? If not, then it is not a proper contract. The second party cannot accept a contract if they have information not presented to them. How would they agree to it?

It would be after the payment is made yes. Once both parties agree the payment has been sent/received the paste is viewed between them.

Oh, so perhaps credentials to a sold account, a method written out, or possibly a link to an external source? Basically the "product", if it can be communicable in text form?

This sounds like an entirely different suggestion from the original post.

Apologies if it feels that way. I'm tired.

Yes something like that.

I just started a contract with a user regarding money making and I really wanted to post the information ON SITE so I can verify myself as the seller of the service the information I am teaching.

It's okay, I think it makes a lot of sense now after that post and I definitely can see how this could be beneficial.

As I was making the contract before with another user - I really wanted to be able to put what I was teaching in some sort of private area that he wouldn't be able to see until we both verified the payment was through.
