Thread: Phishing hackforums website \(hackforums. in.net\)? Don't deal on skype with "prozetas"

Podgor - September 12, 2018, 10:13 am

Hello, I was messaged on skype by user who's banned on HF (or have one of the accounts banned) using skype name "prozetas".

He insisted that I would log in through his link to send him a message (claiming he's another user of this forums).

<http://prntscr.com/ktn2vh>
<http://prntscr.com/ktn31y>
<http://prntscr.com/ktn3ga>

When I figured out his scam, he got spooked.

<http://prntscr.com/ktn3q8>

BE CAREFUL. DON'T DO ANY DEALS WITH SKYPE USER "prozetas" OR LOG IN THROUGH HACKFORUMS. IN. NET DOMAIN.

USE ONLY HACKFORUMS.NET.

mvmt - September 12, 2018, 10:19 am

This guy tried to phish me as well, it was pretty obvious from the beginning on his bogus domain.

NLSProductions - September 12, 2018, 10:22 am little shits lol.

typical for it to be .in how long you think that will stay up now

Podgor - September 12, 2018, 11:53 am

His social engineering skills are poor, he started talking about some hackforums versions, telling me I'm not logged in after I sent 2 messages lol.

Lampard - September 12, 2018, 12:37 pm

Almost got tricked by this. But luckily I found out. Stopped talking once I found out about it lol

Gt403cyl - September 12, 2018, 12:43 pm

Why would people not just login to the normal site?

You gotta be pretty dense to fall for this shit...

Why would anyone login to a site a random person asked them to in the first place?

By mistake, people usually see the link looking fine when you first look. It tricks them to click it without even noticing the domain is different.

Besides, it wasn't a random person but potential supplier of $600 amazon. For some people that's an emotional trigger to got the job done faster (sending a PM to confirm the deal in this case).

Besides, it wasn't a random person but potential supplier of $600 amazon. For some people that's an emotional trigger to got the job done faster (sending a PM to confirm the deal in this case). Here's a good habit to get into (this is for everyone not just OP).

Instead of clicking links from anyone to get to an HF profile, open HF like you normally would and copy the uid from the end of thier link, go to your own profile and replace the uid with the copied one, this ensures you are on the correct site.

This is something I've done for years as I don't trust any links from HF members outside of HF.

Be safe people.

I don't run any AV on my PC's and have never been sorry I haven't nor do I fall for shit like this. I use the best protection out there called "common sense", check and recheck and every link is malicious until I feel it's legit (there are obvious exceptions).

Podgor - September 12, 2018, 2:06 pm

That's the first thing I did. People should always look what's in the link they click.

Armada - September 12, 2018, 3:32 pm

They actually did an okay job at cloning the new theme. Lol Bunch of piss ants...

Juffar - September 12, 2018, 3:36 pm

I don't understand how people fall for bad attempts like this. At least he's advertising my product for free.?

Egregious - September 12, 2018, 4:16 pm

Just tried to phish me too, stay safe.

Did I hear someone say write a script to spam the phishing page with fake info?

Did he reply on hf? Anyone can randomly choose a uid. I'm pretty sure he used a link to a different member's profile in the OP

Let's hope he did. Just coincidental that user owns a RS Database searcher (database work is the keyword I'm referring to), and is a web developer, and it takes just that for the phishing page.

Agree, I'm sure that person wouldn't give you his own uid..

Indeed, he used another user's ID with me.
All he wants are logins and passwords to scam on HF.

I wonder if they are still trying to scam HF users... I'm contemplating on making a script to spam the site with fake logins.

I had a nice conversation with this individual in his live chat that.

It's terribly formatted because I cba, but you can figure out which one is me especially after about the first 3 messages I start using proper grammar.

u dumb if you think your "brain" is gonna keep u safe. you will be hacked sooner or later
That is exactly the mentality that leads to people being infected.

They remove themselves from the equation, putting faith into AV software that is constantly being bypassed..... I mean how many crypters are sold here alone?

I trust myself, you would be shocked at how much better your PC will run without the constant resource hogs of AV.

I've been a PC user since Windows 3.1, well a bit before but that is the first set of memories that are clear right now.... and not once has any of my personal machines been compromised.

(Sep 13, 2018 02:43 PM)0xB9 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) G2A??
If they are trying to get people to login to their site to steal login info for the real site, they would still theoretically need to bypass G2A providing the user has it enabled.

Well, I have informed this to Omni a few days back, just avoided the thread so he is not aware, I am sure he is in forum already with other account
Omni did a quick fix .in.net becomes .net when in PM.

I remember someone phishing other people by inviting them to his forums.
It wasn't HF clone but still people were making account with same login and pass as here.

All this can be avoid with a password manager or at least common sense about security.

Here's some additional details about who was hosting the domain, here's a hint someone on HF owns this host.
