Thread: Social media wants to dig into your brain

PurlieuServices - October 1, 2018, 4:03 pm

Social media invades the privacy of your very mind.

If you're using social media and expect privacy you're wrong already.

Many have been programmed their brains based on what they saw on Social media, it's like TV but x3 more dangerous because every fingerprint is being monitored to analyze you as a person

Couldn't say it better myself.

Social Media is technically everyone's brain if you think about it. It's already in your brain, because once you use social media daily there is no more privacy.

Imagine a world where not even your thoughts are private.

tjashton - October 2, 2018, 12:52 am

Still remains your choice to use it or not. Just don't be an idiot.

There is no privacy. Life is a simulation and we're being watched by... them.

They where already there before you signed up

Why is the lack of privacy worrying you enough to quit all-together though?

PerfectStorm - October 2, 2018, 6:25 pm

Let it dig into your brain, won't bother me!

Its not necessarily just the lack of privacy, but rather fear of some hidden agenda. I'm not a huge fan of being a part of people testing and recording what kind of advertising, posts and articles catches my eyes.

It's only a matter of time before companies like google, facebook, twiter, etc.. require it's users to have mind-reading nanodust before they are allowed to use their services.
