One time I was driving, the car I was driving was turned off because I was inside a building. When I got out, I tried to start the car but it wouldn't start. Some random guy came and somehow fixed it. I said thanks and drove away.

What minor gesture from a stranger made a great impact on you?

A forum administrator increased the number of bytes I earned for posting. It had a huge impact on me at least as far as productivity goes

A couple of years ago, when I was fed up with people and was feeling terrible, some stranger offered to smoke a joint with me and was there to listen to my stories.

A cop flashed their high beams at me telling me to go first, I got home 2 seconds faster that day.

People who feel obliged to meet/talk to me.

I'm standoffish, introverted. I like it, and I don't mind socializing; simply don't like initiating it.

A neighbor gave me $500 towards college tuition one time and he didn't have to. I am forever in debt to him.
