Stability. - October 22, 2018, 10:21 am

NightCrypt

A crypter with a stub coded in C/ASM

Features:

- Native stub. That means compatibility all the way from Windows XP to Windows 10 (Server editions included)
- Important APIs are called via direct syscalls. Syscall IDs are read from a mapped copy of ntdll.
- Unhooking of ntdll usermode hooks to help with runtime-detected payloads
- Unicode Support
- RunPE (Kind of) and LoadPE
- Startup
- Private Stubs

Compatibility:

Majority of native files. Not compatible with .NET

Hi OP,
Are you sure that # is not detected by Avast?

I have read in another crypter chat that # is always detected in runtime by AVG and Avast.

As I wrote at the top of the thread, this is not a new product. Old thread has plenty of vouches from upgraded members. Thanks

Sure could be, but that doesn't mean it can't be bypassed. DarkComet is runtime-detected, and as you see in our videos it went through Avast without issue. That's what the unhooking option in our crypter is there to help with.

ASM dependency? What? I've never heard of that software but if it's native it should work fine.

And no, there are no vouch copies Imfao.

Stability. - November 15, 2018, 1:19 pm

Sorry for all the unreplied messages, we've been very busy and currently are doing maintenance on the crypter. Sales should resume normally soon.

Possible feature we could add in the future if there is great enough demand.

We use only jabber - nightcrypt@jabber.otr.im (OTR required).

3 private stubs (every user gets 3 private and different from each other stubs).

He asked Omniscient if he could change his username, and Omniscient banned him. Yes, that is really the reason why he is banned. See the thread below:

hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=5938724

TitanCrypt is also no longer on HF anymore because HF is implementing a contract system which logs every transaction you do, erasing whatever tiny sliver of privacy was even left on this site. That means the only private crypter left here will be NtCrypt, and even they might stop sales on HF as well for the same reason. Most of the HQ stuff is on exploit only now.
