Thread: Twitch Services Are A Huge Gamble IMO

?Criminal - November 7, 2018, 12:01 am

I'm talking about sub botting and bit botting mainly but yeah, thats how these services obtain their subs and bits, I and many friends of mine never get the payout, twitch just rolls the payout back to a state as if you never received any subs in the first place, twitch has a lot of security in place and they can detect most sub bot methods, the current methods create super obvious fingerprints and if you do buy any just know you're risking huge money like I did just to try it out for the shits and giggles, I no longer waste my breath with these services because majority of the time you never receive the money at all in the first place so why waste like 100 dollars for a crap ton of subs your never gonna get money from, the only one making any profit are the clever sellers not the easily fooled buyers.

Lavish Living - November 7, 2018, 12:04 am

Yeah if you think you can just try and cash out from hundreds of bitter subs... with 0 real ones, you're foolish.

They can probably work and slip under the radar if added in increments while gaining real subs from actually streaming daily but at that point if you're an actual streamer... risking your account isn't even worth the few hundred bucks you might make lol

Legit, whitehat money >>

The only person that actually profited off that was Ninja because botters used to enjoy botting his subs for shits and giggles and it's just making a legit already rich streamer to become even richer.

I'll like to hear more about this discussion. I'm about to start this system.

How many hours have you streamed and how many subs are you pushing from day 0 to x? How you escalate this?

Honestly I don't believe he even got paid for them..

The bots that are available that do this; would raise some flags doing it mass; the best way I could see doing it would be uBot studio on a VM with clean proxies. Even then, you'd need to be editing cookies, browser fingerprint details a lot of work.

Even then, you'd only be able to do a few and have to be actually streaming daily; working on stream then is it really worth risking over few extra subs?

I stopped streaming I work a normal job IRL because streaming just wasn't a monetizable career for me so I moved onto bigger and better.

Yeah, but I asked how you try it with your $100... You've just sent subs to your dead old channel without continuing the streams??

Not quite a streamed a bit but not that often.

elterco - November 7, 2018, 8:14 am

Well... maybe that's the problem

Yeah then obviously you're not going to get money cashed out.

Kerneels - November 7, 2018, 8:40 am

I did not stream or anything on my channel. I subbotted and I got my payout. Can't complain hehe?

I can't post links or images, PM me if you want proof

Bob White - November 7, 2018, 8:42 am

Yeah everyone who is doing this and is an actual streamer will eventually get their accounts closed.

You CANNOT get closed for this as a random person can bot thousands of subs to your account without your knowledge, why would you get closed? Use your brain.

My first month I did around 200 subs, second one a bit more oh dang, yeah im contemplating if my account will get banned or not. Does streaming even matter for gaining profit from subs?

Omniscient - November 7, 2018, 10:48 am

If Twitch doesn't do it now it will eventually. They'll close accounts with a high bot percentage and low legit income. That's just a natural progression for ensuring those who cheat get penalized and to remove incentive to even try.

GainsForDays - November 7, 2018, 11:09 am

Twitch is not stupid.

They are already investigating a service that is being actively sold here.

Sub bots are utilizing specific patterns which can be easily spotted, such as : BIN Number, CCV, User agent that is not changing.. more.. (It is even more obvious whenever they are using Browser based simulation instead of proper GET/POST requests)

People who abuse it and think that it is funny will soon find themselves getting sued by Twitch.

Good luck with your life ;)

Does that mean anyone could potentially harm a streamer of his choice by buying lots of subs and bits and pointing them to his channel?

no thats why twitch has a rollback system, their not stupid and realize people may try to get anyone they want banned, it's not that simple.

lavampiree - November 8, 2018, 11:58 am

I agree to be honest... I don't see the point in them Either :/

Foursenal - November 8, 2018, 1:07 pm

@?Criminal Unless you're a clown you get your payout

I've been getting my payouts just fine cuz I'm not a clown lol
