Thread: Thinking of making a youtube background app.

mycatisadog - November 10, 2018, 3:34 pm

I wanna make an app that can play youtube on the background without any kind of root access, as an apk. But since the app store is not letting people do that I'd have to sell it as an apk, do you think I can sell it to people in the apk form? Would people buy it? If so for how much?

Already exists.

Free app called YouTube Vanced

Yes, you have to download an apk.

My point still stands, it would be redundant for you to make a paid YouTube apk

Hmm, is it open source tho, it may be just sending private information about the user to a server to be sold later since it is free.

You can read about it on XDA or check the website at <https://vanced.app>

How are we so sure you won't do that? Also, for an app of this nature, I don't think people will pay for it. There are many alternatives out there.

DrDoof - November 12, 2018, 3:02 pm

Too many alternatives, come up with something else

realsunjester - November 12, 2018, 3:06 pm

This is a waste of time, there are plenty of apps like this already. I believe I made one (android native, java) last year when a friend of mine was bragging about his "youtube red" lol.

anyway, check some github repos before you start,
<https://github.com/search?q=youtube+background>

Yeah good idea to search before making it lol

tl;dr/ you will not be successful with this app.

Yea, it's also already been said here, why would anyone pay for it when they can get it for free? People would more than likely trust Github instead of having to give up security on their phone/device for your closed source app.

Can't you people read? I literally said OPEN SOURCE and made it italic and bold at the same time, what else I need to do to make you understand it was gonna be open source?

Imao chillax, your original post didn't state open source. your first mention of open source was in reference to whether or not Vanced was

But like, the guy quoted the post with bold open source in it and claimed it was gonna be "closed", I mean come on xD
