Going to give an honest opinion

I've listened to Lil Peep for about a year and a couple months so I'm not just some fanboy dick riding him because he passed away like 99% of other people are. That being said the first part of this song sounds good. But once the reverb (reverb could be the wrong word I'm looking for) kicks in it's way too much. There is simply just way too many sounds happening at the same time. My ears have nowhere to listen with the flow.

Whoever started the beginning of the song (either you or your feature) should be proud of themselves because it actually sounded good compared to the rest of the song. Jesus this post makes me look like a dick head but in reality I just didn't like it and dunno how to word it to make it less offensive Imfao. Srry

EDIT: I am thinking of echo maybe instead of reverb? idk.

anyone else have an opinion on this track tho?

Mr. Corleone - January 8, 2019, 8:04 am

From a person who has been writing songs and producing beats almost everyday for 3 years..

The song is good, however it felt as though the song is missing something.

A piece, something which is gonna make people feel it harder.

I think it's the vocal mixing. The melody is also really good, it sounds a (little bit) dry.

I made a FL vocal preset with just stock plugins, I can send it to you if you want to try something a bit different. (Not for this song, maybe for another one like this).

It's with auto-tune (using pitcher), you can change the settings.

Gonna be honest witchu, I've never listened to "Lil Peep". It might be because of how his name rings, or because he's white, or because his style. Not hating on him as a person, but I don't know if his music fits in the true "hip hop" scene. You dig?

Listened to Peep a lot, I remember all the hate on Peep, now when he's gone the only thing I see is the haters are becoming fans of his music. Dope song btw, keep it up.
