Thread: Farming Marketplace B rating - is this allowed? tim - November 15, 2018, 8:01 am

<https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=5907778>

This user is paying people $0.5 BTC for reputation aka popularity reputation, but he's asking people to make contracts?

Isn't that essentially farming your contract rating and eventually could lead to a BIG trust factor or issue possibly? Such small deals and high quantity would be misleading if he ever does a real deal and could end bad for one person.

A very good point indeed. It could be seen as a loophole, but I am on your side with this.

Conscious - November 15, 2018, 8:34 am

Seems totally wrong to be doing imo!

Hope some rules are written about this if there aren't already.

Crypto - November 15, 2018, 8:34 am

This really shouldn't be allowed imo.

Could so easily be used to scam people in a later stage...

Evanescent - November 15, 2018, 8:38 am

That's abuse of contracts system. It's been warned already in the past.

I had a bit of doubt about that thread too, wasn't even the one to start the contract, it was OP. However, i thought it would've been closed already if it wasn't allowed, I guess It was my fault i should have waited a bit longer. IMO that "deal" doesn't even deserve to B rate it. Also, does that mean that I'm lowkey trapped? he can open a DD if i ever decide to change the rep to -3 somewhere in the future? lol

Enzo Ferrari - November 15, 2018, 9:15 am

Member should be closed he is definitely planning on something else he wouldn't farm b-rating big scaled like this

Saltpeter - November 15, 2018, 9:28 am

It does seem a bit shady, I'd like to see what Omni's stance on stuff like this is.

Are you kidding me? lol.

That's cheap as fuck, especially for the large amount of scams he can commit if people deem him trusted for having 30+ B-Rating which would only cost him $15...

Potluck - November 15, 2018, 9:47 am

Yeah I think they should make it to where you can't use contracts for reputation people been farming B Ratings since the system came out that's why even if someone has high rating I wouldn't use that to deem if I trust the user or not.

Bear - November 15, 2018, 9:48 am

(Nov 15, 2018 10:16 AM)Maxim Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) The guy is buying it for 0,5$ per rep though. A +5 for $2,5 is a lot lol.

I would say that it's fine if the comment on the "B rating" had to include 2-3 words on what the deal was. So that it's obvious that it's low amount deals.

But now it's just a bunch of "thanks", "amazing seller", etc.

Edit. Ow. :3 What if the "B rating" system looked at the contract and from there decided if it was a low/medium/high deal if amounts are mentioned. When using a contract you have to enter a number in? Never used it, so far.

But anyways, then added it to the B rating as a note on the far right.
Dont you have a deal dispute to settle instead of yapping non sense?

B rating is in place to gauge how a seller is doing in marketplace. If I have 60+ ratings from rep exchanges, do you think thats doing any good to the community?

But FYI, heres the open dispute for Maxim: <https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=5790406>
Even though that dispute is from January 25, the beginning of this year. I would presume his dispute would be settled by now.

On-topic though, I really hope Omni finds a way to control this or put a limitation on it somehow. I would hate to see anyone else succumb to the deviousness.

If using contracts for low value transactions is not allowed, then there should be a rule stating so.

WageWolf - November 15, 2018, 10:06 am

It is a loophole, but at the same time, I see no issue, as it is still a valid deal.

I'll take your word for it.

Regardless, with that proof someone may send me, I'll add it if it's legit.

Else, apologies for my doubt on you man.

Either way, none of your uhm B-Ratings display the true aspect of your deal. Having high B-Ratings that have irrelevant text as what the deal was, can be leveraged hard core for a massive currency exchange scam. Like with ease honestly.

Just putting that out there, so hopefully maybe we can have HF and staff look into the policy and see if it could be improved. Either way, all deals are at our own risk and the technology and policies Omni and Xerotic implement are very useful, but supplemental.

All they have to do is not allow rep exchanges using the contract system. That's how they control it? The only policing would be a daily check from staff to see which urchin has done it under contract, then administer the punishment from there.

Because having 100+ B rating and 99 of them are for rep contracts for 0.50 cents doesn't show your a trusted member of the market, it only shows you as boosting your reputation without actually showing you're a trusted member.

Selling a Spotify account for 0.50 and under contract shows you selling an external product to your customer, which shows honest trusted like behavior, standard marketplace behavior.

Doing B boosting through rep doesn't show that, it only inflates a number that can be used to exploit others later, and as the system was designed to show trusted market guys from shitsters, I'd say your way is circumventing that.

You may be a swell guy, but it kind of flaunts in the face of the point of the B system in the first place.

The simple fact is that having 100+ B rating doesn't mean that you're a trusted member of the market no matter what.

Are you suggesting that a spotify account is worth more than $1.5 BTC in bitcoin? I'd certainly rather take the BTC. Bitcoin is also an actual external product.

B ratings were intended exclusively for the marketplace. If you're saying that the only reason you were buying a positive B rating to appear better than you're either lying or pretty sad, lmao.

B RATING is the new HF reputation for the MARKETPLACE.

Before this b rating, people assumed trust off of reputations and trust scan.
Now it's b rating and trust scan.

Omni had a rule saying you CANNOT buy reputation primarily because people could then buy rep and be deceiving in the marketplace.

You buying popularity is essentially abusing the contract system by forcing users to use it for some irrelevant ass deal.

Thus inflating your b rating which you clearly want because you want them to use the cotntract.
Don't hit me with your BS people have historically been unable to brag about reputation?

You're missing the point. B-Ratings were never intended to be bragged about, they were implemented so the marketplace would be safer from scammers.

Users are not required to give B-rating to complete a contract, if they do so they do so by choice. Just like people choose to give rep in exchange for giveaways.

You're missing the point. It doesn't matter that they weren't originally intended to be bragged about. People asked me why I got them, I got them for exactly the same reason I might buy a fortnite skin.
