Probably bcrypt with some trash symbols, like Edmodo. Do you have hashes with known passwords?

No i dont have it since bcrypt is a one-way hash you will have to use a collision technique, like how to check md5's. You will have to encrypt input into bcrypt (using whatever method they used in the first bcrypt hash), then check and see if they match. If they match, then you will know what the hash is. It's very time consuming.
