One reason:

I am a very calm, collected, and thoughtful person. Most people who know me personally would agree that every decision I make is a well thought out and calculated decision. I always try my best to be helpful and courteous to others.

More detailed reasons on why I would like to join:

I have studied multiple topics at the collegiate level and feel that I could contribute at a higher level than most standard users. I believe that quality of posts and activity is definitely an important factor for any group. What I think really sets me apart from other candidates and will make me a good addition to your group is my ability to combine activity and knowledge with my interpersonal skills. I value lasting relationships and actively seek to build those with fellow members. I enjoy meaningful discussions where I can learn from others however I also enjoy giving back to the community, helping others, and teaching whenever I can.

Since rejoining Hackforums I have maintained my activity both within the forum as well as within the private groups that I have been a part of. One of my more analytical contributions to the forum was a thread I posted discussing the reality of EMP attacks.

The thread can be seen at the following link:

If I am accepted, I intend to maintain my activity both within the forum as well as the group.

Dude, you already submitted your application in the other thread, just be patient.

Lukas and the other administrators must be busy at the moment, but I'm sure they will add you eventually. ?

Cheers!

I had PM'd Lukas about the literature section recruitment about a month ago. I spoke with him and he told me to delete my post from mael's thread and repost it in his.

This is a rolling recruitment, so don't be disappointed if you apply and aren't accepted the day after.
