Ok I've f..... up... dont let me do it ever again xD

Elysium - November 22, 2018, 3:53 pm

I was hoping I'd do a little bit better.

Pyro - November 22, 2018, 3:55 pm

i have stopped around 30/50, im not native and i found it really difficult to keep going

Omniscient - November 22, 2018, 3:55 pm

I did 22050.

<https://screenshots.firefox.com/laPI0LGVDdHC8cRG/www.arealme.com>

I did one wrong by accident though so not sure how much that would effect my score.

Still, not too bad I suppose.

Evanescence - November 22, 2018, 3:58 pm

After 35, I could hardly answer. Not native to English speaking countries.

I suppose this is made for* native English speakers* because after #25 the words started to be almost all new for me. Wtf

Fish - November 22, 2018, 4:45 pm

I closed the page, but I got the vocabulary of a 10-year old child in the US. hmmm

MadSyndrome - November 22, 2018, 4:58 pm

I don't read, but I used to write a lot. I think I was just lucky though because the last fifteen or so really messed with my head.

Got 22800 though. Top 5.33% 'level of professional white-collars in the US!'

I do prefer to enunciate in a manner where the majority of potential readers could comprehend.

Similarly to U.S President Donald Trump, as he was accused of speaking at a level of an 8-year-old. You don't want to alienate anyone from engaging in dialogue or comprehension as you may find your writings rather ineffective in its pursuits to convey. ?

Xerotic - November 24, 2018, 1:41 pm

There is bias, however, with a quiz like this. Some words I did not know but I was able to derive the answer by the structure of the word. If you know similar words with similar parts you can essentially derive meaning from an unknown word. This is especially the case if you are familiar with the origin language that the word stems from. Furthermore, multiple choice quizzes allow for the "elimination" method which IMO may show slight critical thinking but produces bias nonetheless.

I absolutely agree however if you get enough data from people taking the test - it can still provide insight.
