Thread: Which is worse, failing or never trying?

Triangle Eye - December 2, 2018, 5:45 am

I've thought about this many times in my life and i will continue to do so i guess.

I've learned that it's worse to never try, you get experience when you fail and you'll learn from it. What do you think?

Armada - December 2, 2018, 5:46 am

What kinda dumb assed question is this?

Try, and try again.. you dont succeed by never attempting shit.

Alot of people live very much in their comfort zone and it's a relatively small and safe life, don't judge to quik, your state of mind isn't the state of mind that everyone else maintains.

Meow - December 2, 2018, 5:54 am

I'd rather start something & fail, rather than not trying it at all.

sh4moon - December 2, 2018, 5:54 am

you may be safer never trying things in life, but you'll also be a spineless pushover. I've found that trying is so much more rewarding. the answer is kind of obvious to me but I feel bad for people who don't feel the same lol

How do you succeed without trying? Learning by your mistakes is one of the biggest things you succeed from

Deany - December 2, 2018, 7:19 am

As a painter of model kits, I can definitely agree that NEVER TRYING is worse than failing. Because when you fail you can correct your mistakes and LEARN as you go. If you never tried at all you will accomplish NOTHING.

Yeah!. I fxck with that bro!

I can't have regret of not trying tbh, id rather accept i couldn't get the result intended and try again or a different route rather than thinking it was never possible.

Many of times i have shocked and impressed myself by simply jumping into things i thought were never possible to find only in reality, how much effort you put in will result to how much you get back. GO FOR IT...

People tell me shits impossible, I just look at it as though its another challenge, just another stepping stone to over come.

100% what you said, it's better to try and fail compared to never trying. This way you could learn from your mistakes and hopefully get it next time.

Logically, it's better to fail and learn from our mistakes than never try... You have nothing to lose... But it's much easier to not even try... Story of my life !

There is a ton to loose. Thats why people dont try. they would rather stay safe and play the status quoe.

No risk, no reward.....

Yeah haha, exactly bro!

Its a confound subject to me, when i see the majority of people spend half of their day if not half of their lives observing people without any attempt to do something themselves.

Get up, go out and fucking do it! Time is relevant.... Life isn't .. the worse that could happen is regret, but that happens on both sides. The greatest achievement is understanding what you've actually learnt from the adventure, fail or not.

L?G?ND - December 2, 2018, 10:00 am

I'd consider never trying to be worse. If you reach failure, at least you can learn from your mistakes and seek self improvement. I guess it ties in with the mindset I have, "it's better to ask for forgiveness than for permission". That is, you're using good judgement and also abiding by the law.

How are you suppose to get anything done if you don't try for it? Talents are discovered by people that actually attempt something and learn about it. You don't just wake up one morning and notice a talent/skill.

Never trying is definitely worse.

I mean, I look at failure as being a success in finding something that isn't successful.

It's crazy, the biggest lie that people tell themselves is not to be weird in order to fit in. However the most memorable people in my life weren't the ones that stood in the crowd and went along with their business, they were the ones that stood out and said what they wanted even if it wasn't the most popular opinion.

Unkn0wnUs3r - December 3, 2018, 3:22 pm

Yup! That's true. People waste to long trying to fit in without focusing on what their actually happy with. In the long run they forget who they ever wanted to be.

Failing and never trying would be worse. I struggle with this daily. I hate putting forth effort if I'm not sure about an outcome. I also hate restarting. This is also a question that is on my mind quite a bit.

Smexy - December 4, 2018, 5:22 am

Never trying coke or heroine was my best decision ever.

SIM-964740 - December 4, 2018, 5:30 am

Man, it's arguably never trying - only because some desire success and some just want success. I would always encourage failure over never allowing yourself an opportunity. There's always another shot.

webdev77 - December 4, 2018, 5:31 am

Never trying is often worse than failing. Depends a little on the context, but in general, that's my ideology.

That's a very thoughtful comment. I totally agree. There is so much to learn from trying. What worked, what didn't work. Being in a state of 'not trying' is the worst form of failing. You would just be thinking about the goal you wished you had, spinning your wheels day after day, maybe beating yourself up for not having the courage to put your ideas into action. A day will come when you'll say "It's too late now. I wish I had at least tried."

Uploader.sx - December 6, 2018, 12:48 pm

Both are not good imo.

But not trying is worse than failing.

Also, you should never fail, always succeed.

Worst of all, never try. It is better to try and experience failure than never to try, and then regret all your life. Even if you are overtaken by failure, you do not need to stop. Even the most successful people were overtaken by failure.

urns - July 15, 2019, 7:02 am never trying is much worse...

Pikachu - July 15, 2019, 9:26 am

I say never trying, cause you wont know until you try. And life is too short, best to make the most of it. Even if you fail, you still learn from experience, and perhaps eventually you will succeed. Just never give up on something you are passionate about. Always follow your dreams, whether you fail the first few times or succeed right away, as long as you are doing what you want to do in life, then go for it.

Dario14 - July 17, 2019, 12:46 pm

Definitely never trying I would say :)

James Burnham - July 17, 2019, 12:52 pm

Failing is worse than never trying. I am constantly trying and it's exhausting. You get a lot of sleepless nights and health issues from the burnout. I really think that to live a good life, you don't need to try much. You need to do what you are good at and expand slowly over time.

?ystem - July 17, 2019, 2:14 pm

Never trying is by far the worst. It often times will plague you with curiosity over whether or not you may of succeeded and just never truly knowing. Plus, life being as complicated as it can be, even if you do decided to go back and try it just wont be the same thing.

never trying why bother failing

HF.Psych - July 17, 2019, 7:54 pm

The fundermental factor within this isn't to look back at failure of trying or not even attempting, it's important to not look at something in a negative aspect because negativity grows into something much larger.

The fact you question it, means you aim to grow. You should always look at something in a positive aspect, positivity grows you into a more positive person.
