Woke up to some nice profits while I was sleeping, this is all automated btw. Only starting with $500, account is up 50% after 3 days so we'll see how things go for the month before I dump big money into it.

Nice dude, keep it up!

I've been reading a lot about online money making lately. I hope I can set something up myself.

How is it automated, you use trading bot?

It's done through a MAM (multi-account manager). This small company I've been following for about a year just released their MAM, in simple terms I deposit funds through a broker and they trade my money for me.

I won't be sharing the company publicly anytime soon, I'm up 50% in 3 days but things could always change. We'll see how it goes after a month or so and then I may consider sharing MetaTrader4, it's what the majority of Forex traders use.

Not sure yet, really just depends on what the returns are for the first month or two. Will assess my options when the time comes

So you brag about making money with a company who did all the work for you and you don't even care to promote the company even though you lose nothing doing so and help other users out? Got it.

The company is young, I don't want to promote them until they have a proven track record. I planned on posting a thread after the first 30 days if things are positive and then it would make sense to promote them publicly.

You must not be very familiar with the Forex market and MAMs.

• Enlil Wolf • - December 9, 2018, 9:28 am

Firstly, congratulations bro on your new passive income stream.

Either way, you are under no obligation to share how and where you are earning from. It is after all just a bragging thread but should you feel that by promoting them down the line would be a good idea. I'd love to see who the company is.

However, I am somewhat familiar with MAM's and Forex trading and if you happen to find a legit and a decent company to work with, they can indeed pull in some good passive income for you.

Regards, Wolf ?

I'm not, but i'm wise enough to understand that "50% after 3 days" is a result of high risk trading, if not, then you're a moron for not investing more than $500.

I'm not saying it isn't high risk, but with a proper risk management strategy you can make quite a bit in Forex because of the leverage these brokers offer (this MAM is 400:1 for example). If you don't know how to manage that leverage, then yeah you're fucked.

Btw 400:1 leverage basically means for every $1 in your balance, you can open position sizes of $400. So a $1,000 balance has the ability to trade with position sizes as large as $400,000.

Eveline - December 9, 2018, 10:25 am

If you read the initial post, yes. I believe he mentioned it in the beginning.

(MAM are Multi Account Managers. They are Forex traders who trade for multiple accounts via their one singular master account).

I've been in forex for 7 years, and to everyone talking negatively, I can completely agree with op about not promoting until he's certain that the company is worth the time and is established before he announces and it turned to shit and we all lose money. Company's willing to trade for you are good, but only if you find the right one. A lot promise x,xxx amount of pips per month, but never hit them targets. So if op found a promising one, that's great. Also if you say he's going to reck his account you're wrong. You have to pay attention to the "lot sizes" which every trade is doing 0.02-0.04 which is actually under. For every $100 you have in your account you want to risk 1-3% of it so you would be looking at trades around the 0.01-0.03, op can take trades up to 0.05-0.08 which the company has below which is proper risk management.

It takes years and years to really learn and get good at forex, but worth it if you can pick it up and be profitable with it.

Good luck with the company op and happy earnings.

Thank you for the clarification.

The greatest thing about this company is that they don't promise any returns, they're very transparent with everything and the process that composes each trade (several different analysts looking over each trade) - so it's nothing near as sketchy as people are making it out to be.

My return for the first month is actually higher than 50% because a majority of the profits were made when I only had $500 deposited. But in simple terms, yeah roughly a 50% return for my first month, which is an incredible return imo.

So bro, in the end, you ended up depositing almost $1k?

Still in the end, for the $1k - $500 in profit is very good (50% return)

Also, now that you have used this for a month - will you be depositing more?

(Hope they don't exit scam like Bitconnect once you deposit more)

Wish you luck & prosperity

That's correct. I'll eventually deposit more as time goes on, don't want to jump in too heavy too fast. Not possible for them to exit scam either since it's through a licensed broker. I appreciate it :)

You clearly know nothing about investing.

Returns are not consistent, they fluctuate up and down. I ended up with around a 50% ROI after the full month had ended; I never claimed to make 50% every 3 days lol

Forex trading definitely a good source of passive income, I personally have been doing it for the past 6 months. Lost over £3k+ making the mistakes, but have recently broken even from the investment I lost. Automated trading is definitely a good way to automate your passive income, but if someone is looking for financial freedom. I would definitely recommend you guys learn the skill, learn how to read price action, learn to identify patterns, and backtest your strategy on multiple currency pairs, then stick to the pair that works best for your strategy. If anyone who's started and has any sort of questions I can help you with, let me know.
