Thread: How do I start reselling clothing and using cop bots?

Swatisky - December 8, 2018, 11:24 am

Hi,

I recently thought about selling one of my pieces so I could manage a budget to start copping/reselling. I really have no idea how this whole business works, setting up a cop bot. (either cheap or cracked) And when to use these as I have no idea WHEN things drop as I don't have any experience.

What would be the best way for me to get into this business?

Regards, ~swat.

Youtube has alot of resources for this type of thing. You probably also need an investment for high quality proxies and a copbot. Goodluck

Here you can find some drops: <https://hypebeast.com/drops>

As for bots, it seems like most people have success with AIO bot (https://twitter.com/ANB\_AIO)

Thanks to both of ya.

I'll buy a cracked bot and see if I have any success. Don't care if I don't, if it doesn't end up working i'll look for something else.

Twitter and YouTube both have a major influence for me

I recommend shoes over clothing because there's a bigger profit/more active community.

Do not buy ANB that's considered the lowest of the low in the community, I would save up for a bot, you won't get anywhere with a cracked bot, might get lucky with something like ANB but I don't recommend it. Just save up.

These are the current bots I recommend:

Be aware of any viruses before you download anything from YouTube.

You need high quality software to work with. Good items from drops go out of stock in a matter of minutes, if not seconds. Especially hot supreme stuff vanish immediately.

There are several ways to resell. You can do eBay, a well-known reselling website called Grailed, or "open" your own shop through an instagram page. Last choice is the hardest since you need to build up a buyer audience but when you've managed that, cash will flow.

also curious about this

jesuschristisfake - December 8, 2018, 1:55 pm

Stop doing it just cuz of money, it makes fashion so damn corrupted

Grailed, Goat, stockx, Instagram or on Facebook groups

But it must be hard to sell shit as a new seller? Why would anyone trust new sellers to really send the items?

EDIT: After some research, it has come to my attention that Grailed requires a PayPal connection, this acts as a sort of safety I guess. Anyway how many % are you able to put on your cops when reselling?

Honestly bro it's not that bad, StockX and Goat you don't talk to potential buyers at all

On grailed as long as you have legit tagged pics then people will buy off you

And it goes the same for facebook, just have to be careful who you meetup with always come strapped or with a friend

Percentage wise it's different for every shoe.. could be anywhere from like 20% to a 400%+ ROI

Edit: forgot to mention, stockx and goat have systems where they legit check the shoes themselves and then send them to the buyer before you receive your money, pretty hard to get scammed on goat and stockx

Anything Nike is pretty hot right now, Adidas is dying hype wise, Yeezys are being mass produced

A good youtuber I recommend would be Seth Fowler to see what's hot this month:

I'm not only selling for the money. Pieces come and go.

I am very deep into fashion myself, just never into reselling and using cop bots. :P

?Criminal - December 8, 2018, 3:28 pm

You need a large amount of capital to start doing this either a loan or high limit credit card if you don't have the cash on hand then you simply buy out inventories of new popular releases and if people want them they either have to pay resale price not retail since the bots copped all retail priced ones or hope more get manufactured, you're pretty much banking off the fact limited amounts get manufactured seasonally and some releases are a one time thing for years to come but the main bar of entry for the resell field is capital(at least 15-25k) which only a few can afford. It's kind of a dickish move in a way when doing resale because you're pretty much using a bot to buy up everything for retail price then doing a mark up thats literally all it is but it's supply and demand, if someone wants it bad enough they will pay for it.

EDIT: This is the one thing people fail to mention, yes you need investment for the bot and proxies but you also need thousands of dollars to load the bot up so you can buy out the inventory via automation, you can't buy shoes with just a bot with 0 dollars to your name, but thats pretty much common sense.

Keep in mind that using a bot doesn't secure you a cop every time, it just increases your chances. So many people piss off developers complaining that it doesn't work because they didn't cop an item.
