Ready up with the controller and you'll be fine.

Input-based matchmaking isn't a part of Fortnite yet but, when it is, it will extend to the entire party. That means if anyone in the group is using a keyboard and mouse on a console, the whole party will be matchmade against keyboard-and-mouse players on PC or PS4.

It 100% is and has been apart of it for a couple months. I used to play native mouse and keyboard on ps4. You can't have spaces in your name, and everytime I q'd (in a party or not), I always matched with people with spaces. You could also look up their stats and see they indeed are pc players.

It wasn't apart of the game for the first couple seasons, but the past 3 or 4 it definitely has been. You can see what platform you'll be playing at the top right of your screen.

I'd also like to note that the article you linked is more than a couple months old. It even notes xbox has no support for kb/m, when they do indeed currently have kb/m support now.
