

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Help game addiction

Armydaddy36 - January 5, 2019, 12:56 am

Hello members, i come to here because i have a problem, i have a son he is in the most beautiful time of his life, but he have an game addiction its not normal he game 16 hours maybe more every single day i think its now 1 year he,s doing that.

I want to stop him my wife says nothing i want that my son going outside for breathing some fresh air, its okay that he,s gaming but not on this way.

he living in a good family with lovely people, he have everything, there is no choice to game alot. i say it alot to him, and my wife doe,s nothing.

im really mad he is wake up, and the first thing what he doing is xboxing, till the night, he game til the morning and when its day he,s going to bed.

But now the problem is the modem when i put out the modem he now that, and its war in my house, he nows that im not smarth with pc,s, i need a program that i can shut down my own router, the router staying on his room, and he change,s the password. i can do it not on that way.

i need a program that i can doss my own router or something, i try already lanc in the beginning its worked for my i put him offline, with lanc and loic but now he was changing something and now its working anymore :(Please help me i want that he,s gaming not to much, please tell me if there is a way, this is the only way i need a program, on this way can i tell him there is an malfunction.

gusud - January 5, 2019, 4:07 am

Dude, just confiscate his xbox.

My parents did this to me when i was playing too much COD on xbox and although I was pissed off for a few days, I got over it.

Discipline is usually the solution.

Put it somewhere where he cant get it because trust me he will look relentlessly, so keep it out of sight.

GL

Demons Move - January 5, 2019, 6:48 am take the power cord away for his console and hide it in your bedroom :-P int main() - January 5, 2019, 8:02 am

You're his dad not his best friend, man up mate.

Deany - January 5, 2019, 8:07 am

Go hire a prostitute for him or something

?torm - January 5, 2019, 7:21 pm

Uhh is this for real? You better step up and put a boot up his ass OP. My parents always took the power cord to my Xbox when I wouldn't get off or if I got in trouble. But DDoS'ing your own router so he can't play? Seems like you need to figure out how to discipline your son. Good luck

Ninja - January 6, 2019, 9:36 am

No way this is not a troll thread.

@Pulse - January 6, 2019, 3:14 pm

Start limiting him over time spiral - January 7, 2019, 8:29 am

(Jan 6, 2019 10:36 AM)Mysterious+ Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) No way this is not a troll thread.
agreed

Badboytil013 - January 7, 2019, 9:11 am

Why so much hate to this that he ask for help, maybe he,s somethimes from home and when he is home he dont wanne troubles in the house, and do it on that way. If his wife see his sone more maybe she let him game, its not hard to change. Help that daddy give him a program or something. I found it cool a dad that wanna hack. Not real but flood his own internet

McCaskey - January 8, 2019, 8:15 am

You will get a lot of troll responses here, i wouldn't take anyone seriously.

IF this is a serious post... then your first problem is you said "he has everything" you spoil him too much.

You do not discipline him, therefore he does not know what it's like to not have such great things.

Sadly this is the generation you live in, i'm 25, have loving parents that gave me mostly everything too.

Luckly i had older siblings to show me "the real world".

Now my older brother has kids and they do the same thing, but he makes them do chores/homework first.

He won't like you for taking away something he loves, or is addicted to. But what addict does? it's the point of breaking addiction.

In his defense, games do help improve your brain cognitive. But if it is resulting in negativity/toxic relationships, then i would be taking away that source immediately.

When he is 18 in a few years, just know your really can't dictate his actions anymore. Either you start now, or you do what your wife does and ignore it and learn to live with it.

Maybe learn to get into with him, see things from a different perspective.