Thread: Who remembers their first moments of consciousness?

Who remembers the first day they woke up and were fully conscious of themselves and their surroundings? The day where you actually lived and remembered a full day. I remember many blurs from ages 1-3 but I believe I first became fully conscious around 5. I remember waking up in bed with a white T shirt on and going downstairs, and I knew who to call mom, and my brothers name. Is anyone else able to vaguely pinpoint their first moments of consciousness?

There's a few things I remember from a long time ago, but can't really place them in order of what happened first. I'd say 4?

i'm pretty sure u can't remember actually when it happened, cause at that point in your life, that day was just as any other day, it wasn't special in any way so no way u could remember that shit

Nope, I don't remember any of this, like most people.

To everyone who says you can't remember. I mean do you remember the day you suddenly just woke up out of nowhere and knew what everything was. Life and full consciousness had to start at some point, and I vaguely remember waking up one day just knowing everything.

No way not even in the slightest do I remember that I have some memories which I think are real, but probably aren't. I read somewhere that your brain can make up false memories. I have a vivid memory of me sitting in a high chair, but I don't think it's a real memory. I think it's just my brain imagining what it would be like to be a child in a high chair.

One thing I remember and know is true is that I played with a train set on the floor of my living room when I was 4 years old or around that age.

I dont think I remember much, I have some memories of hanging out with my cousin when we were 4-5 years old.
