Crusing Self-Driving Cars Saving Money

Due to the exorbitant prices being charged to park in cities, many self-driving cars have begun

"cruising" instead. While this may sound like an amazing idea at first glance, a deeper dive is necessary. With electric, and subsequently self-driving, cars becoming more and more common this is predicted to heavily contribute to traffic in especially high-density areas. It may even give a whole new meaning to the phrase "gridlock." According to transportation planner Adam Millard-Ball, an associate professor of environmental studies at the University of California, Santa Cruz, "Parking prices are what get people out of their cars and on to public transit, but autonomous vehicles have no need to park at all. They can get around paying for parking by cruising," he said. "They will have every incentive to create havoc." >>Source

Twiflo described the anime: "Our story is set beneath the surface of the great metropolis, below the district of Ogi-town in a realm of dreams that floats in a haze of purple lignite smoke. A network of roads stretches away underground, concealing bandits at every turn! An armored train snakes through the looming darkness: the steel-clad train Sokore 463 is equipped with a 75mm mountain gun that can blow a target to smithereens! In command is the mysterious girl Tanne. What awaits her and her comrades? From the winding alleys of Akegata (dawn) to the deep subterranean world
