Thread: Do you taste a difference with different brands of water?

Pikachu - February 13, 2019, 10:21 pm

Some people say all of it tastes the same, but others say some taste different than others. I have friends who dislike the taste of arrowhead, but prefer something like smart water or fiji instead. What do you guys think about the different brands of water? I'm totally cool with the "Great Value/Walmart" brand water, taste's better than arrowhead to me.

Mercury - February 13, 2019, 10:25 pm

I've always felt that you just have "good" water and "bad" water. Good being purified spring water and bad being city tap water. Between these two I always notice a difference.

I've been buying flats of bottled water at costco this past year and I love it. I believe it's only 3 bucks for a case of it.

Taste all falls under how the water was processed and how many minerals were added.

I don't really mind any kind of bottled water but I do taste a big difference between bottled water vs my home's water. I'm fortunate to have an artesian spring on my property and it really is unique compared to all other waters I have tried.

Only thing about the spring water is that there is a lot more minerals in it (especially calcium) compared to normal bottled water etc, but that's really it.

I notice a difference between bad water and good water. But I notice no difference between the 'good' waters, which are all purified and to a high standard (such as any water you will buy in a shop).

I always do this when I'm serving food to people who are particular. I know they only eat certain specific brands or whatever, so I throw in something cheap somewhere. If they find it I will obviously give them the thing they thought it was.. But most of the time they don't notice and it makes for an interesting topic of discussion.

No joke really, some people don't notice the difference lol all water taste the same or am i high i can drink tap water everyday.

Capn_N3m0 - February 15, 2019, 9:39 pm

There are differences based on the mineral content, etc; and various purification methods have different outcomes.

The best water I've ever tasted in my life came from seawater desalinated from a nuclear-powered 10K Gallon/Second still, with a touch of doc's Sodium Hypochlorate.

Not really; hot rock boil water, boil water make steam, steam does a few other things, and then steam cools off to make fresh water.

Sodium hypochlorate is only an atom off from the 5-8% Sodium Hypochlorite in household bleach. You add a few drops of it per gallon to keep algae from forming inside the fresh water tank.

Ah now that you broke it down more to simpler terms it makes more sense lol yeah, nuclear power isn't really all that complicated--there's a few critical safety precautions, and a touch of chemistry inside the hot box, but outside of that, it's really just a giant fucking coffee-pot or steam engine. High-pressure steam can push all kinds of alternators and such to make things go fast worky-worky.

And when it's all steamed out, it can make some damn tasty water to cool it off before you pump it back out to wherever it came from.

That's pretty interesting, i never really looked into nuclear power. ?

Some waters do taste diferent, i find some taste sweeter than others.

Shailan - February 16, 2019, 6:29 am

Different people have different thinking. But mine is specific. Thank you!

Mac Miller - February 16, 2019, 6:44 am

There is no taste difference. Texture on the other hand, oh boy.

My top 3:

1. Voss
2. Fiji
3. Dasani

Niko - February 16, 2019, 4:09 pm

Nestle Pure Life water has always been the best for me, anything else tastes like plastic or dust.

mrnapolean1 - February 16, 2019, 4:44 pm

For me it really depends on what time of the year it is, the temperature (both ambient and of the water) and if I am working hard/sweating.

I like drinking the water brand local to me known as Crazy Water. It has varying levels of minerals in it. Of course I do drink other bottled water like Nestle, Ozarka, and other similar waters. So I'd rate popular/well known brand waters as follows: (with the exception of Crazy Water)

1. Crazy Water - Love it Will drink it if I can
2. Nestle, Ozarka, Kroger, Atwoods, etc all that bottled water taste the same.
3. Deja Blue - Made by Dr. Pepper company. comes in a blue bottle. Tastes like plastic.
4. Aquafina - Another one made by a soda company this time by Pepsico. Better than Deja Blue but still will leave a bit of a plastic taste in your mouth. Doesn't come in a blue bottle but a clear one. :)
5. Fuji - Tastes like shit. Trust me stay away.
6. Evian - Fuji needs to be more like Evian. Tastes ok
7. Core, Smartwater, etc. - These sports waters are too overrated for my liking so I tend to stay away.
8. Local water from the tap - Depends on where you live at. The water around my parts eats water heater heating elements so what is it doing to my stomach? Yes I filter my tap water.

Definitely a difference in taste between tap water and what I buy from Giant.

PARAZORA - February 17, 2019, 5:25 pm

Yeah, and Fiji tastes like mud.

Smartwater is the best

I do think some different brands taste different (however slight it may be) like the Sam's Club brand Member's Mark is almost a little sweet to me while some like LifeWater are just completely flavorless.

I don't really drink water to be real, Beer, Jaiger, Whisky all the way bois.

Fine, sometimes if there is no beer i need to drink some water, but i don't like it at all. I know im not healthy but fk . :(

Cig?r - February 19, 2019, 6:39 pm

I'm so glad somebody made this thread. YES. There is an extreme difference in water. Arrowhead water has a very high TDS level. (Total Dissolved solids.) The spring it comes from is a semi-volcanic aquifer which has small amounts of sulphur.

Pretty much any reverse-osmosis water tastes the same. Smartwater has a very satisfying quench due to it being purified via vapor distillation and then having minerals added.
